Fear Spread By New Deal, Hoover Says In Coast Talk

Administration Policies a 'Fountain of Fear,' Ex-President Avers.

Confusion Reigns, Oregonians Told

Unasked 'Third Party' Is Ruling Nation, Asserts Vandenberg.

Lincoln Day Politics

Former President Hoover, at Portland, Oreg., denounced the New Deal as "a fountain of fear," fomenting Nation-wide confusion.

Senator Arthur H. Vandenberg, at New York, called for a united campaign to turn out of office the "third party" now in power.

Senator L. J. Dickinson spoke at Greensboro, N. C., against "the transformation of our economic system into some hodge-podge scheme of Tugwell collectivism."

Col. Frank Knox and Senator William E. Borah, Republicans, both filed papers for the Illinois Presidential primaries on April 14.

Lincoln's critical attitude on Supreme Court decisions was cited by Secretary of Agriculture Wallace, at Indianapolis, and Senator Barkley, here.

By the Associated Press.

Portland, Oreg., Feb. 12.—Herbert Hoover, assailing President Roosevelt's message on the state of the Union, pictured the New Deal tonight as a "fountain of fear" fomenting country-wide confusion.

Administration policies he charged in an address he titled "The Confused State of the Union" now are hindering "business recovery that began instantly upon restoration of some degree of confidence by the Supreme Court."

Tariff "Put on Shelf."

Before the address he scored present tariff policies and told interviewers "you can't conduct democratic government in secret."

"The present reciprocal tariff was made by a coterie of men," the former President said. "It was done in secrecy and industry didn't know whether it was affected. Perhaps the best men in the world worked out the agreement, but you can't conduct democratic government in secret."

Hoover said "under my Administration, there was set up a tariff commission with complete authority to readjust tariffs on the basis of the cost of production at home and abroad. It was the first time the tariff problem had been undertaken scientifically. * * * This Administration apparently has put the tariff commission entirely on the shelf."

The former President told interviewers "Our silver policy has done more to demoralize trade on the Pacific Coast than anything else." He said he believed an inspection of figures would show a decrease of 50 per cent in trade with China.

"Happier Life" No Issue.

Speaking at a Lincoln Birthday dinner tonight, the former President said:

"The outstanding state of this Union at this hour is a state of confusion—confusion in thought, confusion in government, confusion in economic life and confusion in ideals. Few national problems have been solved."

He scoffed at President Roosevelt's reference, in his state of the Union message, to "the right of the average man and woman to lead a finer, better and happier life" as an issue.

"That," Hoover said, "is an ob-

Resettlement Administration Cost Is 40 Cents of Every Dollar Actually Spent to Date.

By Felix Bruner

Copyright, 1936, by The Washington Post.

Following is the fourth and last of a series of articles concerning the Resettlement Administration, its widespread activities, its methods of operation, its financial resources and its objectives:

The third largest single item in the expense records of the Resettlement Administration is the cost of administration. Thus far the organization has obligated itself to spend $98,568,816. It has actually spent about $46,000,000.

The item of administrative cost is $19,727,305.

This is about 20 cents in every dollar that has been obligated and more than 40 cents in every dollar that has been actually spent!

The money has gone to pay the 13,046 employes of this vast organization, headed by Prof. Rexford Guy Tugwell. It has gone for the rent of office space in 19 Washington buildings and in other buildings all over the country. It has gone for supplies and desks and traveling expenses and all the innumerable items that go to set up Utopia.

Not one cent of this $19,727,305 has gone to those who are to be rehabilitated, resettled or given subsistence.

Overhead Disregarded.

Among the undertakings of the Resettlement Administration is the building of suburban housing, the building of agricultural communities, and the construction of subsistence homestead projects. The scheme calls for many of these projects to be self-liquidating. Yet in the cost of these developments, not one cent of administration expense, the overhead, has been figured. None of the $19,727,305 ever will be recovered by the taxpayers.

Resettlement officials say that one of the purposes of the housing projects is to demonstrate to private individuals that the building of low-cost housing is feasible, and to encourage such building with private capital. Yet the fact is not taken into consideration that private concerns must figure administration expenses, as well as interest on borrowed money—Tugwell, like every other Federal official, is operating with borrowed money—into the cost of the buildings. If these items were taken into consideration Government-built housing would be much

Lincoln Tribute Of Country Led By Roosevelt

Patriotic Organizations of Capital Place Flowers at Foot of Statue.

When Mr. Roosevelt arrived at the foot of the Lincoln Memorial he found the sparse crowds, who had braved the bitter winter day, already waiting.

There were representatives of every veterans and patriotic organization in the Capital, soldiers, sailors and marines in uniform, Boy Scouts and hundreds of Government workers and men and women from private life. There were former soldiers, who wore the medals of many campaigns, and little old women in somber coats, whose memories went back to the days when legends of Lincoln were on every tongue, and not cherished stories of a distant historical era.

The President leaned on the arm of his naval aid, Capt. Wilson Brown, while a special guard of honor carried the White House wreath up the broad stairway to the temple where the sculptured Lincoln sat enshrined.

Then the President stood, bareheaded, sometimes chatting with his secretary, Marvin McIntyre, while representatives of the many organizations filed past the statue with floral tributes—roses and carnations—in a freezing winter wind.

The United States Marine Band blared "Hail to the Chief" and the National Anthem. The memorial was veiled in bleak mist—gray as the uniforms of the Confederate soldiers who fought the Union armies of which Lincoln was commander in chief.

Because of the frigid weather, the few veterans of the Union Army had not a single representative at the ceremony. For them came their sons and daughters, some of these with steps no longer young.

As the services, held under the auspices of the Military Order of the Loyal Legion, ended, a troop of colored Boy Scouts remained, paying homage at the shrine of the man who set their ancestors free.

Quiet observance of Lincoln's birthday was general throughout the city. Flags flew from buildings and residences. In every school a Lincoln program had been arranged. Pupils gave pageants depicting the life of the Kentucky boy who rose from a log cabin to the White House, and on whose shoulders fell the burden of preserving the Federal Union.

In practically every classroom Lincoln's famous Gettysburg address was read.

The Department of the Potomac, Grand Army of the Republic, and allied patriotic organizations honored Lincoln in their own exercises last night in First Congregational Church.

Invocation was delivered by the Rev. Samuel J. Croft, past commander of Lincoln Camp, Sons of Union Veterans, and benediction of the Rev. Alva Breasted, chief of chaplains, United States Army. The Marine Band played the marching songs of the Civil War and the Gettysburg address was read.

Lincoln Called Revolutionist.

Springfield, Ill., Feb. 12 (AP).—Abraham Lincoln was described tonight as a revolutionist by Earl Browder, of Kansas, general secretary of the national Communist Party, in a speech prepared for delivery at a Lincoln Birthday meeting.

The meeting was held in a small second floor public hall after the Communist sponsors of the program were refused use of the City High School auditorium.

Browder quoted Lincoln extensively on strikes, the "working classes," the Supreme Court of the United States and the Declaration of Independence in his attempt to show the Civil War President sponsored causes similar to those of the present Communist Party.

Senate Is Given Neutrality Bill Banning Credit

Passage Prior to Feb. 29 Deadline Forecast as Fight Opens.

By Robert C. Albright.

A compromise neutrality resolution, junking most of the controversial provisions in pending legislation, but amending and extending the present law until May 1, 1937, yesterday was unanimously reported by the Senate Foreign Relations Committee and immediately indorsed by House leaders.

Prohibition on loans and credit to belligerent nations, and exemption of American republics from the terms of the act when they war with foreign states, were written into the existing law, which expires February 29, unless early action is taken.

House to Act Quickly.

A fight on the plan, led in the Senate by Senator Bennett Champ Clark, of Missouri, and in the House by Representative Maury Maverick, of Texas, developed at once, but leaders expressed confidence the amended resolution can be rushed to passage before the February 29 deadline.

Speedy action appeared likely in the House, where Representative Frank L. Kloeb (Democrat), of Ohio, introduced an entirely new resolution embracing the Senate committee's amendments. Chairman Sam D. McReynolds, of the House Foreign Affairs Committee, summoned a meeting of his group this morning to consider the Kloeb substitute, and forecast its approval.

"I feel that this is a very happy compromise," McReynolds said.

His view was echoed in the Senate by Senator Hiram Johnson (Republican), California, who said:

"No Compromise."

Clark and Maverick said they will offer amendments to extend the present law only 60 days, and demand the drafting of stronger legislation in the interim. Maverick declared the "American people have been double-crossed" by the report, which he labeled "a rotten, cowardly retreat." Clark said the resolution was "infinitely better" than the present law, but added:

"Just because we are under the gun is no excuse for delaying action indefinitely on the most important question before Congress and the American people today."

Chairman Gerald P. Nye, of the Senate Munitions Committee, called a conference today of Senators interested in a more drastic bill to decide "what we will do about it."

"No compromise on the question of neutrality is satisfactory to us," he said. "The problem of staying

Air Road Sale Held 'Bribery By Congress'

Ridiculous, Says Nichols of Effort to Make Owners Buy.

Smith, Reynolds Offer More Resolutions in Controversy.

By James D. Secrest.

The proposal to force Washington Airport owners to pay Arlington County $50,000 in exchange for a quit-claim deed from the War Department for a portion of Military road yesterday was called "an attempt at bribery by Congress" by Representative Nichols (Democrat), Oklahoma, as the Senate and House Military Affairs committees called another meeting to work out a compromise in what appears to be a deadlocked controversy.

Nichols, who is the leading figure in local airport legislation on the House District Committee, assailed the more recent resolutions carrying the $50,000 sale provisions as "the most ridiculous thing of which I ever heard."

He predicted the legislation will never pass the House in its present form.

"I'll raise such a rumpus they'll never get the resolution through," he said. "And I'm sure that the majority of the House will never vote for a measure to turn over public property to a private corporation with the condition that the corporation pay a county rather than the Federal Government."

Fifth Set of Resolutions.

Nichols' outburst came on the eve of another joint meeting of the subcommittees of the Senate and House Military Affairs Committees, called for 11 o'clock this morning, and followed the introduction of another set of resolutions—the fifth—in the Senate and House to authorize the Secretary of War to close Military road or erect traffic guards thereon until the National Airport Corporation turns over $50,000 to Arlington County for construction of a substitute road.

The new bills, offered by Representative Smith (Democrat), Virginia, and Senator Reynolds (Democrat), North Carolina, were similar to the latest resolution drafted by Chairman McSwain, of the House Military Affairs Committee, except that they do not contain the provision for the auctioning of the road in case the airport owners refuse to pay for the War Department barricades or deposit $50,000 with Arlington County.

McSwain intimated that members of the sub-committee would be agreeable to a compromise at today's meeting because of the obstacles encountered at every previous move. He said that the former proposal to erect gates or some other traffic guard on Military road pending the settlement of the several controversies which have arisen over the terms will be considered seriously.

Latter Solution Accepted.

Indications were that the latter solution, suggested last week by Representative Smith, is the only one that will be acceptable to both houses of Congress. As Congress has no authority to tax the airport for the maintenance of these guards, it is likely that the War Department will have to bear the cost, despite its disinclination to have any part in the control of traffic on the highway.

As Saturday, the day of the threatened closing of the airport to public air transportation nears, warnings of the Department of Commerce, the Postoffice Department and the airlines are noticably subsiding.

McSwain predicted that the closing order can be withheld indefinitely, despite the "emergency," while Sigmund Janas, president of the American Airlines, yesterday changed his attitude and denied that he had said the airline would transfer operations to Baltimore on Saturday unless Military road is closed, regardless of the ruling of the Department of Commerce. Members of the House Military Affairs Committee said, however, that they had so understood him at last Friday's hearing.

The attitude of the airlines and the Federal department agencies appeared to be that whatever Congress decides are adequate safeguards on Military road will be acceptable temporarily to all concerned.

Standing in the way of the passage of any resolution introduced so far in the Military road tangle

'Dutch' Irwin and Six Others Convicted in Gambling Trial

Morris E. (Dutch) Irwin and six of his alleged henchmen were judged guilty by a District Supreme Court jury last night on seven counts for operating a gaming establishment and taking bets on horse races.

The jury of six white and six colored men reached their verdict shortly after 10 p. m. after deliberating since late in the afternoon.

Justice F. Dickinson Letts then denied strenuous pleas of defense attorneys that their clients be released on bail and ordered all seven of them to the District Jail—the first time in local history that such a large number of men convicted on so many counts have been sent to jail in a gaming case.

They all face sentences ranging from 3 to 32 years. The others convicted with Irwin were Leonard F. Hill, Wilbur S. Carroll, Norris A. Mahone, Edward J. Gibson, Frank E. Crandall and James McIntyre.

Sentences will probably not be imposed for about two weeks until defense attorneys, Harry T. Whelan, Charles E. Ford and Joseph D. Kelly, have had the opportunity to make their plea for a new trial, or failing this, for an appeal. Justice Letts set Friday of next week for the hearing on a new trial.

The men were tried following a sensational raid last October on an establishment in the 1100 block of Fourteenth street northwest, during which police arrested 44 customers and seized van loads of gaming equipment from what was said to be one of the city's most elaborate gambling headquarters.

Senator Norris Asks Congress To Curb Court

Says Unanimous Verdict to Void Acts Should Be Required.

In a caustic attack on the Supreme Court and its AAA invalidation, Senator George W. Norris (Republican), Nebraska, yesterday declared the AAA ruling "cannot stand," and called on Congress, "if it has the courage," to enact legislation requiring unanimous court opinions on constitutional questions.

Norris took the floor in defense of the Administration's AAA substitute, now pending in the Senate, which he admitted "is not satisfactory" to any member of the Agriculture Committee which reported it.

"But it is their belief that if it is possible to get something out of chaos, this bill will accomplish it," he added. "I have no doubt of its constitutionality, but I say frankly do doubt whether it can receive the approval of the Supreme Court; but I am grasping at a straw."

Action Called Unlikely.

The Norris proposal that Congress enact a statute requiring unanimous opinions by the Supreme Court was not taken seriously by leaders on either side of the Capitol. In one influential quarter it was said that "unless the pressure becomes very great," Congress can be expected to do nothing this session either in the way of a constitutional amendment or a delimiting statute. In this quarter it was pointed out that to act now would be to plunge the Constitution into politics and confuse the issues. Possibility of a movement toward a constitutional amendment immediately after the November elections was seen, however.

As Norris took the Senate floor to defend the Administration's farm program and assail the Supreme Court, Secretary of Agriculture Henry A. Wallace, speaking in Indianapolis, said the AAA substitute has a good chance of early passage.

Wallace said a "sincere attempt" is being made to legislate a program the Supreme Court will hold constitutional, and declared it is the Government's proper function to build the soil.

Cites 3 Propositions.

The court can hold the program constitutional, he said, if it recognizes any one of the following three propositions:

"1. The fact of the Nation-wide interdependence of all commerce, from the humblest farm to the largest corporation.

"2. The extent to which the doctrine of States' rights is being used as the final refuge for antisocial corporations.

As debate lagged on the new farm bill, which is not due for a Senate vote until tomorrow, House and Senate approved a conference report on a $50,000,000 feed and seed loan bill, and sent it to the White House.

Another farm bill was introduced

Meat Packers Face $40,000,000 Suit

By the United Press.

Chicago, Feb. 12.—Thirty of the Nation's largest meat packing companies today faced suit for return to retailers of $40,000,000 in processing taxes collected under the defunct AAA.

A bill of complaint filed in Superior Court charged that the retailers actually paid the tax and that the money recently returned to the meat packers by the court order should be passed on to the neighborhood butcher.

Included among the defendants and amounts sought from them are Armour & Co., $11,533,256; Swift & Co., $8,708,300; Cudahy Packing Co., $2,715,234; Wilson & Co., $3,760,235, and T. M. Sinclair & Co., Ltd., $1,071,241.

The three plaintiffs, William and Charles R. Kessler and Louis Feldman, also asked for an injunction to restrain other claimants of the tax from instituting litigation until settlement of their own case.

7 Die, 8 Lost in Hotel Blaze; 4 Perish in N. Y. Cafe Fire

Lakewood, N. J., Victims Trapped in Sleep; Only 3 Identified as Firemen Wage Futile Fight; 30 Injured in Midtown Manhattan.

By the Associated Press.

Lakewood, N. J., Feb. 12.—Seven bodies were recovered tonight as weary firemen dropped the search for eight others missing in the smoldering ruins of the Victoria Mansion Hotel, swept by a disastrous early morning fire.

A score were injured, eight seriously, as the guests, roused from sleep, dashed for the exits to flee the flames which swept through the 65-room, three-story structure.

Coroner Raymond A. Taylor said three of the dead suffered fractured skulls in leaps from the burning structure.

They were identified as Mrs. Ruth Sherman, 28, of the Bronx, N. Y.; Mildred Fischer, the Bronx, a bookkeeper, and Harry Ehrlich, 29, of the Bronx, a farmer.

Four Victims Were Children.

One of the four other bodies found was identified as Runya Feldman, 5, Rockaway Beach, Long Island.

The other three bodies were also of children. Two were tentatively identified as Charles Abramowitz, 5, of Brooklyn, and Robert Eller, 5, New York.

Chief of Police Walter Curtis said that after a check of other hotels and private homes in this resort village, he was convinced the eight missing perished in the flames.

Thirty-seven guests were in the hotel as the flames from a still-unexplained cause swept through it. Many had come from the Lincoln Day holiday.

The search for bodies was abandoned tonight as a cold, wintry night clamped itself on the town. The hunt will be resumed in the morning.

Meanwhile, an investigation was under way into the causes and whether the building had adequate safeguards.

A woman who was a guest at a hotel across the street gave the alarm. Police Sergt. Russell Soden and Louis Thielen, Lakewood's only full-time fireman, hurried to the hotel. They rescued three persons before the ladder they had placed against the side of the building caught fire and was destroyed.

Duryea E. Stoney, a local building inspector, said he inspected the hotel November 5, found the fire-fighting equipment in good order, and thought the three fire escapes and exits were adequate.

The origin of the fire has not been determined.

Among those still unidentified were Mrs. Caroline Sommers, 60, Far Rockaway, N. Y., and her granddaughter, a Mrs. Abramowitz, 35, Brooklyn; Mrs. Irene Eller, 25, of Eastern Parkway, Brooklyn, her daughter, 14 months; Mrs. Armin Marco, Jackson Heights, Brooklyn, N. Y.; her mother, Mrs. Halpern, 60, Jackson Heights; Mrs. Feld, 55, the Bronx; Bernard Bernstein, 30, head waiter and brother of Mrs. Abe Kuppersmith, wife of one of the owners, and Benjamin Kelman, 22, son of Louis Kelman, another owner.

Copeland Gives Health Parley Indorsement

To Seek Increase in Funds, He Says; Civic Groups Support Meeting.

Expressing "perfect sympathy" with plans for Sunday's mass meeting, Senator Royal S. Copeland (Democrat), of New York, yesterday pledged renewal of his long-standing fight for adequate public health funds for the District when the 1937 supply bill reaches the Senate Appropriations Committee.

On D. C. Committee.

"Of course we're not spending enough," he said emphatically, "and I intend to keep up the battle until the Capital gets the appropriations it should have for hospitals, tuberculosis and all other public health activities."

He said he received an invitation to attend the mass meeting, which will be held at 3 p. m. in Central High School auditorium, but deemed it obligatory to decline because of his position as a member of the Senate Appropriations Committee.

The Senator, a former health commissioner of New York and one of the Capital's most articulate champions in civic matters, also is a member of the District Committee.

Efforts of the District Medical Society to obtain adequate health funds were praised by Robert Helmholz, corresponding secretary, on behalf of the Federation of Architects and Engineers, Chemists and Technicians, in a letter to Dr. Sterling Ruffin, society president.

Deprived of Essential Services.

"The executive committee of the Washington Chapter of the Federation of Architects and Engineers, Chemists and Technicians," he wrote, "instructed me at its meeting Tuesday evening to inform you that this organization fully supports the stand of the District Medical Society with respect to the need for an increased health appropriation for the District of Columbia.

"Ours is a union of technical men and women employed in this city. As technical men, we cannot condemn too strongly a shortage both of facilities and of personnel as that shown to exist here by the recent series of articles in The Washington Post."

Washingtonians, the letter added, are being deprived of services es-

Howell, Brother of Democratic Aid, Indicted in WPA Fraud

By the Associated Press.

Atlanta, Feb. 12.—Alex S. Howell, brother of Chairman Hugh Howell of the State Democratic executive committee, was indicted today by the Federal grand jury on five counts charging filing of false claims against the Government and violation of the emergency relief act.

Howell, former manager of a WPA project dealing with a study of school records, was charged with using WPA workers to mail copies of the Georgia Woman's World, a publication alleged to contain political propaganda.

The publication, containing pictures of Mrs. Franklin D. Roosevelt being escorted to an automobile by a Negro, was widely circulated at the recent Macon "Grass Roots" convention at which Gov. Eugene Talmadge, critic of the Administration, was indorsed for President.

The WPA project in question was ordered halted by National Relief Administrator Harry L. Hopkins about ten days ago.

Howell issued a statement denying the charges.

"I have never falsified any records; neither have I worked any WPA employes except Saturdays and holidays, and then at their own request in order for them to make a little extra money in their desperate plight to keep body and soul together," he said.

Howell, a former supervisor of the State department of education, was charged with violations between December 5 and January 28.

A bench warrent was issued for Howell's arrest and his bond was set at $1,000, the minimum amount.

In addition to the charge of using WPA workers to circulate political material, Howell was accused of falsifying time records.

Coast Raked By Tornado; Snow to Fall In City Today

Damage Wide-Spread in Southern California Blow.

Another Cold Wave Moves Toward East

World Wide Weather.

In southern California six persons were injured as tornadoes struck four cities.

In the high Sierras blizzards raged while hail and snow closed the Columbia River highway. Train service on the Los Angeles-San Francisco coast route was disrupted.

In Washington, more snow was due to fall as the cold wave moved eastward. Accidents in the Capital injured eight persons.

In 12 countries of Europe 100 were dead in a terrific storm, which wrecked five ships.

Death rode the gales which swept down from Canada's Mackenzie basin. It was estimated that 200 had perished in the three weeks of record-smashing weather.

Gov. Clyde Herring of Iowa urged State-wide rationing of fuel to end suffering as the third severe storm in ten days swept the State.

Lack of coal closed the South Dakota State College and the State University.

Tornadoes ripped through four southern California cities last night. Six persons were injured.

The Midwest, tired of the coldest winter of this century, was preparing to meet another session of record-breaking cold with many empty coal bins.

In Washington and most of the East snow, with the possibility of a change to rain, was forecast for today with the temperature rising slightly but dropping tomorrow.

Property damage in Alhambra, Long Beach, South Pasadena and Torrance, Calif., exceeded $100,000, the Associated Press reported.

Strong at Long Beach.

At Long Beach the tornado was strongest. All the injured were in that area.

At Alhambra Mrs. P. K. Swinnerton said she saw an automobile swept across a street and then tossed back against the opposite curb. The driver was unhurt.

The most seriously hurt was Dorothy Compson, 11, of Long Beach. Her legs were broken by timber which fell when her home was unroofed.

Harvey Connett, 62, suffered a fractured collar bone when an oil derrick fell on his house. He was taking a bath at the time.

The others hurt, all at Long Beach, were R. W. McDougall, 46, Gladys Hoops, 19, Doris Shoop, 7, and Dorothy Clancy. They were either cut by flying glass or timbers.

The heavy snow which already had struck Iowa, the Dakotas and Minnesota was forecast for the rest of the Midwest, as coal shortages reached the point of famine.

Gov. Clyde Herring of Iowa urged State-wide rationing of coal as temperatures of 25 below zero were forecast. "We appear to be steadily losing ground in this situation," he said.

62-Year Record Falls.

At Bemidji, Minn., a thermometer reading of —41 marked the twenty-ninth consecutive day of sub-zero temperatures. A 62-year record fell at Bismarck, N. Dak., when a below-zero reading was registered for the thirty-third successive day.

Both the South Dakota State College and the State University were closed because of lack of coal.

At Paducah, Ky., increased fears were felt for nine men marooned in the frozen Ohio River lest the ice gorge which holds their houseboat break suddenly and crush the boat.

Food and medical supplies were dropped to the men yesterday by Col. R. O. Powell, of Cincinnati, district supervisor of the Army Board of Engineers.

In another attempt to open a path to the Milwaukee Children's Convalescent Home in Waukesha County workmen manned snowplows. The institution has been snowbound for a week.

Shovelers and snowplows successfully reached the village of Winslow, Ill., which had been cut off by snowdrifts "as high as telephone

Knox, Borah File in Illinois Primary Battle

Both Bear 'Son' Labels; Support for Senator Asked in Nebraska.

By the Associated Press.

Springfield, Ill., Feb. 12.—Col. Frank Knox, of Chicago, today became an avowed candidate for the Presidency, filing a few minutes behind Senator William E. Borah, of Idaho, for the Illinois Republican preferential primary.

It marked the formal entry of the Chicago publisher in the Presidential fight, and promised a test of strength several weeks in advance of the Ohio primary, for which Borah had filed earlier.

April 14 is the date of the Illinois primary, at which will be elected 50 of the 57 members of the State's voting delegation at the Cleveland national convention. Ohio votes May 12.

Although the Illinois preferential primary is advisory only it is regarded as offering an early spring test of Midwestern sentiment.

Knox, has a "favorite son" indorsement of the Republican State committee, and Borah, who was born in southern Illinois, is put forward as a "native son."

The preferential primary is independent of the election at the same time of two delegates and two alternates from each of the 25 Congressional districts. The law suggests the delegates be advised by the Presidential voting, but permits them to remain unpledged.

Knox and Borah delegates are being quietly entered in many of the districts, along with others who are independent.

Because Senator Borah's name was entered first, by a margin of a few minutes, Statehouse officials said it would appear first on the primary ballots.

Lincoln, Nebr., Feb. 12 (AP).—A campaign to put Senator William E. Borah's name on Nebraska's Presidential preferential primary election ballot April 14 was launched today after the Idaho Republican said he wanted "very much" to enter the race in this State.

Asserting 75 per cent of Nebraska's Republicans are for Borah, Barton Green, of Lincoln, former chairman of the Lancaster County Republican central committee, said he would form a committee to circulate petitions immediately.

Green long has been an ardent supporter of Senator George W. Norris, veteran Nebraska Republican independent, who has announced he will support President Roosevelt for re-election.

The Idaho Senator may face a contest with Gov. Alf M. Landon of Kansas for Nebraska's delegates. While Landon's Nebraska friends have made no move to put his name on the ballot, some members of a delegate slate have announced they are supporting the Kansas Governor. Landon will speak here February 29 at a Founder's Day celebration.

Enters Coast Primary.

Los Angeles, Feb. 12 (U.P.).—Senator William E. Borah tonight formally entered the race for the Republican nomination for President in California primaries.

The entry was announced at an inaugural meeting of the first California "Borah-for-President" club by Charles A. Sunderlin, Los Angeles attorney and close friend of the Idaho Senator for more than 25 years.

Hard Luck Story Wins Leniency for Autoist

San Jose, Calif., Feb. 12 (AP).—Noles Eilerson contended he couldn't pay $25 remaining due on a $50 reckless-driving fine because: His employer quit business and left him jobless; his wife wrecked his automobile; the Mrs. spent a week in a hospital and Noles' last good suit was stolen from a cleaning establishment.

Justice C. L. Moore rated Noles' alibi as "tops" today and gave him a 30-day respite.

Neutrality Controversy Appears Ended This Year; Present Laws Sufficient.

By Franklyn Waltman

FOR THIS YEAR, at least, it appears that the controversy in Congress over neutrality legislation has been ended, for all practical purposes, by the action of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee in voting unanimously to extend until May 1, 1937, the existing temporary arms-embargo law, with, however, important amendments.

Perhaps some of the most ardent advocates of neutrality legislation will agree that this is just as well—that no harm will be done by the failure to work out a more complete law at this time. The current Italo-Ethiopian situation does not require more than the existing statutes to safeguard this country's neutrality. Should a more threatening war situation develop in Europe, there will be time enough for Congress and the Administration to act.

On the other hand, it is obvious to most observers that serious and lasting damage might be done to the country's welfare—in the way of foreign trade, and by embarking on a radical change in policy from which it would be difficult to withdraw—if the pending proposals for a more complete and permanent law were adopted.

Still another reason why it is wise to lay aside the formulation of a permanent neutrality policy is the impossibility of getting calm and objective consideration of such a measure in a campaign year. So appealing, and yet so deceptive, is the cry that "I am for neutrality—I favor keeping the United States out of war," that consideration of the subject should not be mixed up with politics. The demagogue always takes the side of any proposal labeled "neutrality," no matter how unsound or vicious—and people frequently do not have the patience to hear lengthy explanations of the thoughtful candidate as to why he is not for that particular proposal.

* * *

Indeed, President Roosevelt last summer came close to being forced to hold the short end—to use a vernacular phrase—of this political stick. His State Department commenced its study of proposals for neutrality legislation almost a year before Capitol Hill became excited about the problem.

The Department's experts soon learned that neutrality could not be made invulnerable merely by a law asserting "we shall be neutral in all future wars." They attacked the problem from different angles, but found in many instances that certain steps designed to preserve a state of neutrality led to dangers and evils as great as those they wished to avoid.

Mr. Roosevelt, as much as anyone in the country, wishes to keep this country out of war—so did every President we have ever had—but he likewise realized that before anything constructive could be achieved, without at the same time setting in force harmful trends, the subject should be further explored and studied.

So the Administration last summer decided to lay the subject aside for further consideration. But at the high flush of enthusiasm for "keeping us out of war," the neutrality bloc on Capitol Hill demanded immediate action. For a day the President and Secretary of State deliberated fighting off this movement. But the popular pressure was too great, and Mr. Roosevelt realized he could not appear before the country fighting neutrality legislation, whether sound or unsound, so he compromised on a temporary law.

In the meantime some of the heavy fog which has confused much of the thinking about neutrality has been cleared away by discussion and the revelations contained in recent publications. The appearance of J. P. Morgan and his partners before the Nye committee, as much as anything else, contributed to clearing up the confusion of thought over why this country went to war in 1917. The bankers were convicted of being commercial bankers—not of being demons who schemed their country into the conflict.

The Administration, at the beginning of this session of Congress, accepted in substance the proposals of the Nye-Clark group, which, incidentally, had also learned a few things from studying the problem, and was more moderate than last summer. But even that measure does not appear acceptable to a majority of House and Senate.

In the first place, the cotton South and the oil-producing Southwest appear unwilling to let the President have the power to place embargoes on the export of those commodities, even in the name of keeping the country out of war. Producers of copper and manufacturers of steel and automobiles are no more willing to forego war trade. Their opposition springs primarily from selfish interest.

But disinterested students of the problem are not so certain that such legislation would not seriously reduce the peace-time demand for those American products, thus permanently injuring the country's foreign trade. The thought has also occurred to some that, if the country embarked on a policy of denying vital raw materials to belligerents, would not other nations adopt similar policies—and then what would happen when the United States went to war?

Furthermore, consideration of neutrality legislation has been marked by conflicts between those who would shape it to permit support of movements by other nations to stop wars through the use of sanctions, and those who would keep the country isolated. Thus it appears impossible to get a majority to agree at this time on permanent isolation, and the issue goes over for a further period of hard thinking, it may be hoped.

* * *

Out of the controversy of the last year, however, one thought emerged. It is that while we want peace above all else, as a country we are not ready to pay the price of peace—either in the way of sacrifices necessary to maintain peace throughout the world, or in pursuing a neutrality policy once war breaks out. We have not yet learned that there must be a discipline of peace, as well as a discipline of war—we have yet to realize that peace is no feather bed.

* * *

And just to show what we think of benighted foreigners, the House Immigration and Naturalization Committee yesterday ordered a favorable report on the Dickstein "anti-gigolo" bill. As explained by Representative Dickstein "this bill would provide for the exclusion and deportation of counts, fortune seekers and other such gigolos who marry American citizens for the purpose of hastening their own admission to the United States under our immigration law, whenever an American court annuls the marriage on the grounds that such marriage was fraudulently entered into."

Nancy Lee, 15-Oz. Baby, Is Reported 'Thriving'

Oakland, Calif., Feb. 12 (AP).—Ten-day-old Nancy Lee Vogt, prematurely-born infant, is gaining weight and "thriving," her physicians said tonight.

They were unable to estimate how much the baby, the smallest on record here, had added to her 15 ounces, but stated "her face and body are filling out."

Nancy Lee weighed 16 ounces at birth, but lost an ounce before she was placed in a cotton-lined incubator. She will not be weighed again until she can be removed with safety.

Drs. J. W. Sherrick and H. E. Stafford reported improvement of her jaundice condition.

Former Aid Refuses Aimee's Gift and Job

Los Angeles, Feb. 12 (AP).—Aimee Semple McPherson, blonde evangelist of Angelus Temple, sent a chicken and a reconciliation offer today to her former publicity agent—who turned down both.

"I'm not going back to that old temple," said Vivian Denton, 26-year-old former showgirl. She drank poison after Mrs. McPherson discharged her.

She also said her throat burned too much for her to eat the chicken.

"Vivian's job will be waiting for her as soon as she's well enough to go back to work," Mrs. McPherson said.

Knox Charges Tories Direct Administration

Says President Infringes on Liberties Behind Liberalism Screen.

By the United Press.

Boston, Feb. 12.—Frank Knox, Chicago publisher and possible Republican Presidential nominee, tonight assailed the New Deal as an essentially Tory movement and President Roosevelt as "the arch-Tory of them all * * * seeking encroachment upon the liberties of the people behind a smoke screen of false liberalism."

Speaking at the annual Lincoln night dinner of the Middlesex Club of Boston, Knox said that if the Great Emancipator were alive today, he would counsel the American people to "carry on" the fight for the Constitution.

Spoils System Criticized.

Contrasting what he termed "the system of government which has come to be known throughout the world as the American system * * * with that other system which has come to be known as the New Deal," Knox maintained that:

1. "Mr. Roosevelt has a different conception of the Presidency" than that laid down by the Constitution. "His is a conception of the government of men and not of laws."

2. The New Deal "is a frank return to the spoils system . . . Tammany Hall has moved to Washington, and Mr. Farley, acting as the personal agent of Mr. Roosevelt, has built up a record as a spoilsman which makes Andrew Jackson look like a schoolboy."

Powers Held Enormous.

3. "Laws which constitute the New Deal . . . have been drawn up by Mr. Roosevelt's bright, young men under Mr. Roosevelt's tutelage and direction."

4. "They vest in Mr. Roosevelt enormous powers . . . aimed to unfetter the President from the control of law and to create a government of discretion—the discretion of Franklin Delano Roosevelt."

5. "The national industrial recovery act handed bodily to the President the power to make law . . . this power to make law under the NRA was exercised by Mr. Roosevelt by the issuance of decrees in the style of the old Roman emperors."

6. "* * * Consolidation in the hands of President Roosevelt of the power to make * * * and administer law sets up a government which * * * will inevitably snuff out the liberties which have marked America."

Drive on Dishonesty.

7. President Roosevelt's "utterances disclose a deliberate attempt to undermine the confidence of the people in business leadership to the end that they may place their trust in political leadership."

In the latter connection, Knox charged that publication of the list of salaries of business executives was designed "to arouse the envy and the resentment of the people."

Knox called on "the vast majority of honest business men" to drive the dishonest from their ranks or "the leadership of the politicians will be forever saddled upon the people of this country."

Young Republicans Boost Landon.

Independence, Kans., Feb. 12 (AP).—Gov. Alf M. Landon's home town heard him offered tonight as a candidate for President "if the people wish to return to the 'horse-and-buggy' honesty and common sense of Abraham Lincoln."

One hundred and twenty-five Third District Young Republicans attended a Lincoln Day luncheon at which a resolution was adopted saying:

"We believe that a Young Republican of this district personifies those principles which have been forgotten by the President—principles which our people as a Nation must regain in order to have a Government of laws rather than of men.

"If the people of this country wish to return to the 'horse-and-buggy' honesty and common sense of Abraham Lincoln, then we offer to the country our distinguished Governor of this State as a candidate for President—Alf M. Landon."

Landmark Laws Subject of Parley

Means of procuring funds for preservation of historic sites and preparation of a model law for the States for preserving shrines and landmarks throughout the Nation will be discussed when the Advisory Board of Historic Sites meets today.

The board, recently appointed by Secretary of Interior Harold L. Ickes, will be unable to draw from the Treasury general fund for preservation of historical objects of national interest. It plans, however, to put at the disposal of States and local groups the results of its future research.

The meeting, to be held in the Internal Revenue Bureau at 10 a. m., will be the first since appointment of the board.

New Deal Held A 'Third Party' By Vandenberg

By the Associated Press.

New York, Feb. 12.—Picturing the forces of recovery as straining at a leash held by the New Deal, Senator Arthur H. Vandenberg tonight urged an allied campaign against what he called the "third party" now in power.

The Michigan Republican, a potential candidate for his party's Presidential nomination, took cheer from the anti-New Deal speech of former Gov. Alfred E. Smith, and said he welcomed "Jeffersonian cooperation."

"Not only in the battle line," he added, "but subsequently in the council chamber after next November's victory is won."

Quoting the words of Lincoln, he said:

"Let us turn this Government back into the channel in which the framers of the Constitution originally placed it."

A balanced budget.

Proper tariff protection for American products.

Senator Vandenberg, who spoke at a dinner of the National Republican Club, made an allusion to President Roosevelt as an Executive who "has frankly expressed his contemptuous wish that no constitutional scruple, however, persuasive, should interrupt his infatuated program."

He asserted the President maintains "high ministers of state who frankly pine for a revolutionary order."

Urging the Republican Party to "rise above itself and address all citizens who love their institutions," Vandenberg said:

"What could be of greater cheer than the forthright courage with which many distinguished Jeffersonian Democrats unhesitatingly declare this challenge? This is no more their regime than it is ours."

He then pointed to former Gov. Smith as a Democrat who "manfully declines to wear 'the mantle of hypocrisy.'"

Carey Submits Bill To Reorganize FCA

By the Associated Press.

A sweeping reorganization of the Farm Credit Administration was proposed in a bill yesterday by Senator Carey (Republican), Wyoming.

Introduced by request of the National Federation of Farm Loan Associations, the Carey measure provides that the office of governor of the Farm Credit Administration be abolished, effective next July 1, and that all duties and powers of the office be vested in a Farm Credit Administration board of five members.

Democrats said the bill does not have Administration support.

House Delays Passing Army's Appropriation

Huge Supply Bill May Be Approved Tomorrow; Air Increase Loses.

By the Associated Press.

Difficulties beset the record $543,000,000 Army appropriation bill yesterday, with advocates of a super air force suffering a setback, and the plans of House leaders for quick passage thrown askew.

While the big measure made almost no progress on the House floor, the Military Affairs Committee, meeting in secret, voted three to one against an amendment to boost to 800 the 565 new planes provided in the bill for the 1937 fiscal year.

Chairman McSwain (Democrat), South Carolina, of the Military Committee, one sponsor of the plan to bring the air force to 4,000 planes by adding 400 a year, declined to indicate whether he would press the move on the House floor. Some committeemen were frankly skeptical of House approval without committee backing.

At the same time, however, the committee decided to back McSwain in his proposal to provide funds in the bill to make the Thomason act effective. This act, passed by the last Congress, provides 1,000 reserve officers shall be given a year's active duty annually, with 80 officers selected each year for permanent active duty.

Amendments Up Today.

House leaders had hoped to have the big Army bill out of the way last night. Progress was so slow, however, that forecasts were revised to indicate passage by tomorrow night. Pending amendments will be considered today.

Chairman Parks (Democrat), Arkansas, of the sub-committee on the War Department bill, told the House yesterday that members of his committee "were confronted on one hand with the need for keeping appropriations within budget bounds, and on the other, of disregarding that need or subordinating our unanimous conviction of the inadequacy of budget estimates to provide in proper measure for military defense preparations."

Despite Parks' statement there were indications of opposition to the measure.

Representative Biermann (Democrat), Iowa, said he would offer a motion to recommit the bill to the Appropriations Committee with instructions "to report the bill back in ten legislative days with sufficient reduction in the amounts to bring the total appropriations below $460,000, provided that none of the reductions shall be made in the Air Corps."

"Four hundred million is more than any other country ever spent on an army in peacetime," said Biermann. "The money carried in this bill—$543,000,000—is $54,000,000 more than Congress appropriated to run the entire Government in 1906."

Committee Unanimous.

Representative Bolton (Republican), of Ohio, ranking minority member of the sub-committee, told the House the bill represented unanimous agreement of the committee, indicating proposed amendments would have rough going.

On the Senate side, meanwhile, a resolution authorizing the Secretary of the Navy to prepare plans for the construction of two lighter-than-air craft was introduced yesterday by Senator Johnson (Republican), of California.

The resolution referred to the report of the special advisory committee of scientists named to study the future course of the lighter-than-aircraft program.

Johnson would authorize the Secretary of the Navy to include an estimate of the cost of two airships and make a comprehensive report to the House Naval Affairs Committee.

Supreme Court's Votes 84 Per Cent Unanimous

Supreme Court justices voted unanimously in 102 of the 121 decisions made public during the current term.

This was a unanimity rating of 84 per cent. In the 19 dissents there were ten 6-3 decisions, five 5-4 decisions and two each of the 7-2 and 8-1 combinations.

Justices Brandeis, Stone and Cardoza, winning or losing, voted together in all of the 121 cases.

Preference to Veterans Seeking U.S. Jobs Asked

A bill to give veterans of the World War and the Spanish-American War, together with the widows or wives of disabled former service men, preferred status in all Federal employment was introduced in the House Tuesday by Representative Starnes (Democrat), of Alabama.

The measure was referred to the House Civil Service Committee for consideration.

Forced Landing In Gale Injures Four in Plane

4 Army Fliers 'Bail Out' Safely; Passenger Suicide in Air.

Albuquerque, N. Mex., Feb. 12 (AP). A private cabin biplane, caught in a stiff desert wind, was demolished today in a forced landing in which the four occupants were shaken and injured.

A veteran New Mexico hier said it was a "miracle" B. C. Skinner, owner and pilot, and his three companions were not killed. Buffeted by the wind over Enchanted Mesa, 50 miles west of Albuquerque, they landed at Acomita.

Life Not in Peril.

Dr. W. R. Lovelace, who treated the girl at an Albuquerque Hospital, said she suffered two fractured ribs, a bruised chest, exposure and shock, but that her life was in no danger unless complications arise.

L. B. Keller, 34, employed by Skinner, and his niece, Miss Beatrice Keller, 22, and the pilot were badly shaken and bruised.

They were flown here by Maj. A. D. Smith, division superintendent of the Transcontinental & Western Air Line, after an emergency radio call from the Acomita field. All were taken to a hospital.

Four Fliers "Bail Out."

Atlanta, Feb. 12 (AP).—Four Army fliers "bailed out" in parachutes and floated to safety today, when their Panama-bound bomber faltered and crashed near here. The official inquiry was started soon afterward to determine the cause of the disaster which was blamed on either lack of fuel or motor trouble.

The plane, one of a group of 11 bombers and 13 pursuit ships that left Landley Field, Va., Tuesday, had been forced down last night at Gainesville, 60 miles northeast of here, when its gasoline supply ran low. It was en route to Atlanta to join the rest of the flight.

Capt. Otto C. George, pilot, of Hiawatha, Kans., blamed faulty motors.

Lieut. Robin B. Epler, Bonner Springs, Kans., copilot; Sergt. George Russell, New York, and Sergt. Harry Hayes, San Antonio, Tex., drifted into trees. The crew leaped from about 2,500 feet.

The plane was demolished.

Plane Suicide.

Oakland, Calif., Feb. 12 (AP).—A man tentatively identified as Harold A. Sprague leaped to his death today from an airplane 2,000 feet above San Francisco Bay, despite an attempt by the pilot to dive under and catch the falling body.

Seeing his passenger was about to jump, Pilot Emanuel Henderson passed down the ship to try to hold the man in his seat. The man jumped clear. Then the airman vainly tried to maneuver the plane into the path of the falling body.

Identification was made from a wallet the man left at the Municipal Airport. It contained automobile driver licenses issued by California and Michigan, and 82 cents in cash. At his rooming house, the landlord, M. P. Comsky, said he knew the man as J. A. Sprague, formerly of Denver, with a wife and child in Chicago.

Fifteen Shaken in Landing.

Louisville, Ky., Feb. 12 (AP).—Twelve passengers and a crew of three were shaken up but escaped injury tonight when a twin-motored American Airlines transport plane crashed after an emergency landing at Bowman Field.

The plane, on the New York to Los Angeles run, was re-routed through Louisville tonight because of weather conditions. It landed here without difficulty, but a few seconds after taking off came back to the field because of difficulty resulting from ice on the wings and carburetor.

In landing the plane skidded on the ice-covered field and turned over in a ground loop. The left motor was torn out and a wing was damaged.

Unemployed Man Kills Self With Gas

Frank W. Farmer, 44, 501 Seward square southeast, killed himself in a second-floor room of his home by inhaling illuminating gas. Coroner A. Magruder MacDonald issued a certificate of suicide.

Farmer was found unconscious with gas escaping from a heater by his landlady, Mrs. Martha Posey, who went to Farmer's room when she smelled gas. Efforts of the fire rescue squad to revive the man were futile. He was pronounced dead by a doctor from Casualty Hospital.

A letter was found in Farmer's room notifying him he had been discharged from the Navy Yard, where he was employed as a machinist. The latter was dated February 5. Mrs. Posey told police Farmer had been in ill health and had not been to work for some time.

Two Killed, 20 Injured In Tunnel Explosion

Chicago, Feb. 12 (AP).—Two workmen were killed and a score reported injured tonight in an explosion in a sanitary district tunnel at S. Kedzie avenue and W. Thirty-eighth street.

First reports to police said the blast appeared to have been caused by dynamite, presumably in the course of the work.

The West Side Hospital said two of the men were dead when they arrived there, but their identifications were not immediately available.

In addition to the tornadoes, the Pacific Coast was swept by wintry gales. Train service along the coast route between Los Angeles and San Francisco was disrupted, blizzards swept the high Sierras, while the Columbia River highway was closed because of sleet and hail.

Dogs Mad With Hunger.

In Freeport, Ill., livestock was killed by a wolfish pack of hunger-mad dogs.

Washington's predicted snow today may turn to rain, the forecaster said, due to a rising thermometer, but tomorrow, he said, will be fair and colder again.

Haze and mist and frigid winds bit through the streets here as the temperature reached a maximum of 31 at 4 p. m. The low mark was 5, recorded at 6 a. m.

Three persons were injured, one seriously, yesterday when a Capital Transit bus skidded in the snow in the 300 block of Anacostia road southeast and crashed into a light pole.

Condition Critical.

Mannie Graves, 49, who lives in the rear of 111 Anacostia road, was taken to Casualty Hospital with a fractured jaw and internal injuries. Physicians said her condition was critical.

Mrs. Ruth Sullivan, 33, of 111 Anacostia road, and her son, James, 16, were badly bruised. They were given first aid at Casualty Hospital, and then taken to their homes.

The bus was driven by Clarence McNamee, 27, of Berwyn, Md., who said the heavy vehicle got beyond control in the snow.

When his sled into the side of an automobile at Division avenue and Grant street northeast, Harris Tibbs, 17, of the 5500 block of Jay street northeast, suffered a fractured right leg. He was removed to Casualty Hospital.

Sally Westall, 17, of 1750 Massachusetts avenue northwest, was treated at Emergency Hospital for concussion of the brain and lacerations to the head, received while sledding on the Shoreham Hotel hill. She is in an undetermined condition.

Bicycle Skids.

Leroy L. Evans, 16, of 725 Ninth street northwest, a messenger boy, received a possible concussion of the brain when the bicycle he was riding skidded on the ice in the 700 block of Fourteenth street northwest. He was treated at Emergency Hospital.

Russell Solomon, 14, of 1924 Sixteenth street southeast, fell from his sled while sliding in the 1600 block of W street southeast. Taken to his home he was treated by a family physician for possible fracture of the right ribs and lacerations of the body. His condition is not serious, however.

William Mitchell, 45, of 1725 Kilbourne place northwest, was identified by papers in his pockets after he approached a policeman at Fourteenth and F streets northwest and said he could not remember his name. He told the officers he slipped on the ice somewhere on F street and injured his head.

Huckster Dies.

Another name was added to the list of those who have died indirectly as the result of the three-weeks cold wave here yesterday when Coroner A. Magruder MacDonald said Patrick McDonough, 59, unemployed huckster, found dead several days ago in a house in the 1500 block of South Capitol street, died of heart failure, induced by the cold.

In the District yesterday firemen were called to extinguish a small fire in the flooring of the kitchen at Holy Cross Academy, Connecticut avenue and Upton street northwest, which started when overheated steam pipes ignited the floorboards.

Lakewood Fire

Lexington avenue and Fifty-ninth street.

Firemen estimated at least 30 persons were injured, some critically. Eight ambulances were summoned, along with four police emergency squads. About 150 persons were attending a dinner and dance given by the Holy Name Society of the Church of Our Lady of Peace. The blaze was believed to have started in a shirt shop on the ground floor and to have spread upstairs to the restaurant. Two alarms were sounded.

The dead are Martin S. Stettner, 28, address listed by police as 28 Wehner place, Allendale, N. J., and by other sources as 125 East Fortieth street, New York; John J. Gardella, 22, of Corona, Queens; Harry M. Chu, 35, manager of the restaurant, New York, and an unidentified white woman, about 27 years old, 5 feet 6 inches tall, wearing a cameo ring.

A guest at the dinner, Raymond Vollmar, 22, said he saw two men leap through a second-story window to the street.

Injured persons were taken into nearby shops for treatment by ambulance surgeons.

Montreal Convent Burns.

Montreal, Feb. 12 (AP).—The Ste. Cecile wing of the Ville Marie convent here was destroyed by fire tonight, but there were no deaths or injuries.

The hundreds of girls who stay at the convent were evacuated, and many of them went to the homes of their parents for the night.

Firemen, summoned by two alarms, saved the remainder of the large building from severe damage. The convent belongs to the Congregation of Notre Dame and is managed by nuns of that order.

100 Are Killed As Storm Rages In 12 Countries

Travel, Shipping Stopped; Quake Adds Horrors as 25 Die in Greece.

Copyright, 1936, by the United Press.

London (Thursday), Feb. 13.—More than 100 persons had died from the terrific storm now sweeping Europe as the gale, accompanied by snowstorms and frigid temperatures, entered its fourth day.

The known dead totaled 99. In addition scores of deaths by freezing were reported in the Balkans.

At least five ships were wrecked. Shipping, communications and travel were at a standstill. Tremendous property damage was inflicted in a dozen countries.

Twenty-five died in Greece, where an earthquake added to the horror of the blizzard. The death toll in Italy rose to 25 when wreckage of two fishing boats, carrying 11 men, was found and the crews given up as drowned.

Twenty-one were killed in England; 13 persons died in a Bulgarian train wreck caused by a frozen switch, and seven Spanish sailors were drowned when the gale overturned their boat. There were nine deaths in France, where food supplies were endangered in some areas.

Scores of deaths were reported in Austria and Hungary from excessive cold. Most of these victims were undernourished or partly intoxicated persons caught in snowstorms.

All modes of transportation were disrupted.

Three Greek steamers and several sailing ships were driven ashore at Saloniki. Three others sent SOS signals.

Five feet of snow isolated Greek villages. Telephones and telegraphs were out of service, heavy rainstorms alternated and when earth shocks began, the frightened inhabitants rushed from their houses despite the bitter weather. Several Greek trains were snowbound and the fate of eight buses carrying an undetermined number of passengers was unknown.

Earth shocks also were reported in far-away Darjeeling, India.

The Italian troopship Umbria, carrying 2,000 soldiers to Massawa, was driven ashore on the African coast. The men were said to be in little danger.

A British lightship broke her moorings off the English coast and a vessel was sent to her assistance.

The Bulgarian train wreck injured 8 persons in addition to the 13 killed. A passenger train crashed into a freight when an ice-covered switch failed to function. Thirty-six cars were demolished.

British naval maneuvers off the English coast were canceled. All shipping sought safety of harbors.

The weather forecast said the extreme cold, the worst of the winter, and the gale winds would continue through Thursday.

Police Gunfire Halts Bandits In Maryland

Four in Gang Surrender to Two Officers; Burglar Kit Is Found.

Two Prince Georges County policemen, blazing away with pistols, forced the surrender yesterday of four colored bandit suspects who stalked along the Washington-Baltimore boulevard at College Park, Md., carrying an automatic shotgun, pistols and a kit of burglar tools.

The policemen, Warren Peake and Howard Slater, sought to stop the men for questioning. Instead of stopping, the men ran, but when the officers opened fire the quartet dropped their guns and stopped.

Each of the four, according to the officers, has served jail sentences.

Holdup Believed.

Peake and Slater said they believed the men had planned either to holdup Hunter's filling station on the highway near where the shooting and capture occurred, or to take an automobile from a motor agency nearby to replace a stolen machine they had abandoned.

The men were walking along the highway, one carrying an automatic shotgun and another a valise later found to contain an assortment of burglary and robbery tools, including a blow torch, drills, tape, blackjack and revolver.

Peake and Slater saw them as they passed in a police cruiser. They turned the car around and were returning to the band when the men broke into a run.

"We both opened fire with our pistols," Peake said, "shooting as close to them as we could without hitting them. The fellow with the shotgun dropped it and they all came back."

Peake said the man with the shotgun turned and aimed as though he meant to fight it out with his captors. As the gunfire from the officers continued, however, he apparently changed his mind.

The men were taken to the police station in Hyattsville and questioned. They denied holdup or buglary intentions and were later turned over to Baltimore police as suspects in a series of robberies there.

Phone Chief Gives Up; 'Sam Feeds His Patrons'

Little Rock, Ark., Feb. 12 (AP).—The president of a telephone company serving Mulberry, Crawford County, notified the State utilities commission in an inventory today that he would ask permission at the end of the year to discontinue service because "the people are not working; Sam feeds them."

Felker reported that he had 18 business phones in operatoin, 38 customers on party lines and 200 "idle phones."

The commission said it assumed Felker's mention of "Sam" referred to "everybody's uncle."

Thomas Seized With 8 Pickets In N. Y. Strike

By the Associated Press.

New York, Feb. 12.—Norman Thomas' efforts to win for department store employes the right to unionize today landed him in jail.

The national head of the Socialist Party was arrested in front of a Brooklyn department store on charges of disorderly conduct, together with four other men and four women pickets of the Retail Clerks Union. A srtike has been in progress at the store since September, on the issue of union recognition.

Thomas was released on $500 bail, supplied by Miss Adelaide Shulkind, of the League for Mutual Aid. He said he would be in Bay Ridge court tomorrow for arraignment.

"I'm not sorry I got arrested," Thomas said afterward, "although it was the first time I ever was arrested in New York. I didn't go to Brooklyn to get arrested, but to encourage workers who are striking against intolerable conditions. Now it seems like a good time to fight this thing out. There is a general anti-labor attitude in Brooklyn, more so than in Manhattan. My arrest was illegal, because several magistrates have ruled that such picketing—the usual picket line—is legal. However, some other magistrates have ruled otherwise. The only unusual thing was that one picket was dressed as Abraham Lincoln."

One of the pickets, a man, was bailed out tonight. The women were locked up in a matron's room at the Poplar Street station, awaiting possible bail later.

Thomas was in custody a little less than an hour. He had two rides in a patrol wagon during that time. Taken from the store to the Butler Street station, he later was transferred to the Poplar Street headquarters.

Lieut. John Berg asked him if he were a Communist.

"I am not," he said emphatically.

Thefts of Mail Laid to Postman By Grand Jury

Accused of Stealing Two Letters; 19 Others Are Indicted.

Accused of having stolen from the mails two letters containing small amounts of money, Allen J. Derwent, a postman attached to the Connecticut Avenue Branch Postoffice, was indicted by the District grand jury yesterday. In 19 other indictments reported to Justice Daniel W. O'Donoghue, charges ranged from passing counterfeit money to first-degree murder.

Derwent, police said, was arrested January 8 by postoffice inspectors after a stationery firm at 720 Seventeenth street northwest, had made several complaints. The inspectors reported they trapped Derwent with decoy letters, in each of which there was a small sum of money.

Bennie White, colored, 22, was charged with first-degree murder in connection with the fatal stabbing of William Hoover, also colored, last December. The two had differences in a card game and White, police said, whipped out a pocket knife and stabbed Hoover.

The sharp eye of Miss Irma C. Hake, cashier of the Ney Liquor Store at 903 Pennsylvania avenue northwest, led to the indictment of Philip F. Adams on a charge of possessing and passing counterfeit money. Miss Hake noticed a $5 bill he tendered did not seem genuine and she detained him in the store until Secret Service agents arrived. Adams is also said to have passed a $20 spurious bill at the Fifth and K streets stand of Nicholas K. Pappas, in March, 1935.

Wilbur Lee Burns, false pretenses; James Farnnum, violation of section 851-b, D. C. code; Allen J. Derwent, violation of section 195, U. S. penal code; Mary Johnson, violation of section 72, title 18, U. S. code; Philip F. Adams, violation of section 265, title 18, U. S. code, and Bennie White, first degree murder.

Those against whom the grand jury ignored charges were: James H. Ford and Wilfred K. Fairfax, housebreaking; Marguerite Dishman, grand larceny; Lee Wiggins and Roosevelt Rollins, assault with a dangerous weapon.

Postlude . . . .

By Ray C. B. Brown

Joint recital by Lotte Lehmann, soprano, and Emanuel List, bass-barytone, in the Mayflower Hotel ballroom Wednesday morning; Erno Balogh and Fritz Kitzinger, accompanists. Program: For soprano—Von ewiger Liebe, Botschaft (Brahms), Traeume (Wagner), Barcarolle, Hasard (George Bagby), Auf Fluegeln des Gesanges (Mendelssohn), Widmung, Auftraege (Schumann), Heimkehr vom Feste (Blech), Caecilie (Strauss). For basso—Der Wanderer, Der Lindenbaum (Schubert), Die beiden Grenadiere (Schumann), In diesen heiligen Hallen (Mozart), La Calunnia (Rossini), Old Black Joe (Foster), Old Man River (Kern), Kuessen ist keine Sund (Eisler), Wien du Stadt meiner Traeume (Sieczniski).

Only the sternest and most captious mood could have utterly resisted the sirenian artistry of Lotte Lehmann or the histrionic vocalism of Emmanuel List at yesterday's recital, and the majority of the auditors apparently put up no resistance whatsoever. Both the visitors from the Metropolitan Opera were showered with plaudits, and one even heard now and then in the tumult a "brava" and a "bravo." The salutations to Frau Lehmann had the friendliness of previous acquaintance, while Herr List was hearteningly welcomed as a newcomer.

The soprano was in splendid voice, every tone of crystalline clarity, and every word flawless in enunciation. Her lieder readings were infused with warmth, and eloquent with felicitous subtleties of intonation. Her lyric instinct is remarkable in its surety, in the precision with which it hits upon the exact significance of a phrase. Every song was pleasurable in its impact, and difficult as it is to choose, one would say that the most effective of all were Schumann's "Widmung" and the "Caecilie" of Richard Strauss.

Of all musical artists, the singer is the least able to evade the deteriorating consequences of popularity, which makes such inexorable demands for incessant performance. The vocal equipment is the most fragile of instruments, and the most in need of recuperative intervals. Frau Lehmann's voice seems to show traces of weariness. One hopes that it was only imagination that made one hear in her climactic tones an edge of shrillness which one would hesitate to call shrewish in connection with so gracious a personality.

Emanuel List, in his disclosures of cavernous sonority and dramatic intensity, made one desirious of viewing him in the panoply of opera. He is essentially a figure of theatrical dimensions, and in sinister roles he must be genuinely portentous, while his power of humorous evocation must make him irresistible in the vein of comedy. Even without the accessories of costume and make-up, his reading of Rossini's burlesque aria, "La Calunnia," was masterly in mimetic art.

His delivery of Sarastro's aria from "Die Zauberfloete" was compact of dignity and vigor, quickening with its impressive accents. That he is capable of a tender lyricism was evident in his fine interpretation of Schubert's "Der Lindenbaum," while there were surprises of artistry in his treatment of Stephen Foster's folksong and Jerome Kern's "Old Man River."

D. C. Chapter American Guild of Organists presents Robert G. Barrow in recital Wednesday night in National City Christian Church. Program: Prelude and Fugue in G major (Bach), Pastorale (Franck), Suite, "The Cathedral" (Robert G. Barrow), Grand Choeur Dialogue (Gigout), last three movements of Symphony No. 2 in E minor (Vierne).

This program cannot be said to have taxed the resources of the young organist of Washington Cathedral, although it did give a fair idea of his adaptability, his technical ease, his taste in registration and his interpretative style. Not yet of exceptional stature in artistry, he has a sound foundation in musicianship and a serious intent which promises well. Moreover, he has a wining way with the behemoth of instruments, a combination of craft and strength that betokens future mastery.

More tentation than assurance was evident in his suite, publicly performed for the first time. Its impressionism stands revealed in the titles of the four movements: Buttresses, Gargoyles, Cloisters and Arches. Each is a sketch, a suggestion of imagery, rather than a completely drafted idea. The strongest of the four is Buttresses, which has weight and dignity albeit of a romantically Hugoesque kind, and the weakest is Gargoyles, in which the fantasy is not sufficiently sardonic.

In his readings of other composers, Mr. Barrow seemed to have a predilection for the picturesque. In handling the abstractness of Bach, he just failed to vitalize it completely; the fugue did not soar, but ever kept contact with the earth.

Villard Brands U. S. as Armed Peril to World

Women's League Is Told Country Is Nearing Militarist Ideal.

America has become "a military and naval menace" to other countries, Oswald Garrison Villard, former editor of the Nation, told the Women's International League last night in Pierce Hall.

This country, he contended, has "arrogated" the right to say no other country shall have a navy as large as that flying the Stars and Stripes.

"What we are doing," he said, "is breaking down the American Republic by creating a great standing Army and Navy, a tremendous Army and Navy lobby that is tied up with every reactionary force in the country and all the superpatriotic ancestral societies."

He criticized the New Deal for increasing military appropriations. He said naval officers regard an invasion by Japan as "physically impossible" and described as "absurd" suggestions for a larger standing Army here to check subversive elements.

The world, he said, is armed to the hilt.

"As fast as humanly possible," he added, "we are everywhere approaching the ideal of the militarist who visualizes and seeks a world in arms, with every male child from 9 years up as a part of the armed forces, as is the case today in Italy and Germany.

"The growth of the Russian standing army is appalling. It is the largest in history—1,300,000 officers and men."

Tutorski to Present Recital With Giron

Basil Tutorski, Russian-American composer and pianist, will be heard in a joint recital with Mercedes Giron, floratura soprano, Friday afternoon at the Shoreham. Several of his own compositions will be included in the program: a prelude in F sharp minor, a Fantaisie Impromptu in F major, and a "Love Song."

Mr. Tutorski began his musical education at the age of five, as both a violinist and pianist. He graduated from the University of Moscow, and during the war he served as an officer in the Imperial Russian navy, narrowly escaping death when the flagship Empress Maria was blown up in the Black Sea, in 1916.

Returning to his musical career after the armistice, he had varied experiences as an orchestra leader in Turkey, in radio and motion picture work in America, touring this country and Canada with a Russian orchestra, and numerous recitals in Mexico and South America. For several years he conducted a music academy in Hollywood, listing among his patrons many screen celebrities.

New Nazi Law Tightens Grip Of Secret Police

Decree to Aid Undercover Drive on Communists and Catholics.

By the Associated Press.

Berlin, Feb. 13.—Nazi secret police tonight controlled the offices of civil district governors under a law designed to remove hindrance from police undercover activities against Communists and Catholics.

The grip of the secret state police on public life was tightened today by a law made public through the official Gazette after a series of swift raids, principally in the Rhineland, caused the arrest of more than 100 Catholics and Communists on charges of allegedly conspiring against the government.

Henceforth, the Gestapo (secret police) will be unhampered by civil officers and are empowered to issue commands to governors who in turn pass them on to local police officials.

Catholics Sentenced.

Sentences and fines have been imposed on Catholic officials and members of other sects prohibited from holding meetings.

The new decree was described in official comment as assuring that the "secret police's striking power will be unhindered and guarantees close expert collaboration with civil officials."

The Rhineland drive apparently was halted for the moment or had come to an end since the first raids Friday which were climaxed by the arrest at Cologne Sunday of Ludwig Wolker, head of the National Catholic Church in Germany was being persecuted brought a sharp challenge from the official organ of Adolf Hitler's Black-Shirt Guards, Die Schwarze Korps.

The charge is as "old as the church itself," the "SS" organ declared, and always follows whenever the church's political ambitions are thwarted.

Treason Case Cited.

"No Catholic priest has been arrested because of his spiritual or welfare work," the paper said, "but priestly robes are no safeguard against punishment for treasonable activities."

The Black Shirts cited the case of Father Kenter, of Dresden, sentenced to two years imprisonment for "spreading communistic propaganda."

At the same time it announced the increased police jurisdiction, the Official Gazette also defined the duties of German citizens abroad regarding military and labor service in Germany.

Those citizens liable for such service were said to be required to report annually to their consuls for registration, even though they possess double nationality.

Exceptions would be only in case they are serving in foreign armies or navies or on account of physical or professional disabilities. Consuls are empowered to decide these latter factors.

Biological Survey Asks Help In Feeding Migratory Ducks

A plea for the co-operation of persons living along waterways to assist in feeding migratory wild ducks which "are starving in the ice-bound waters of Maryland and Virginia" was circulated yesterday by the Biological Survey of the Department of Agriculture.

The survey's plea was inspired by the story in yesterday's Washington Post reporting the "rescue" of a duck too weak to fly by Frank Bertram Levy, mechanical engineer, with a soft spot in his heart for wild life.

Levy was arrested when park police found "one duck on his person" but was released when he convinced them his "intentions were honorable." The duck was restored to the Federal bird sanctuary at Roaches Run after a good feeding.

Police denied that any of the wild ducks in the sanctuary were in real danger. The birds are fed each morning by Caretaker Paul F. Hodge, it was pointed out. Migratory birds arriving at the sanctuary after feeding time, it was admitted, might find themselves in trouble.

In requesting the co-operatoin of waterways residents the Biological Survey announced that it would provide the necessary feed to all those who communicated with James Silver, regional director of the survey.

In reporting the abridged resolution, Chairman Key Pittman of the Senate Foreign Affairs Committee, had pointed out that the Administration and "the country as a whole" desire Congress to terminate its work at an early date.

"There are many matters of domestic concern that require, and are entitled to, first consideration," Pittman had said. "It would seem evident, therefore, that these domestic matters cannot be acted upon without delay if a serious controversial question is to be debated without limit upon the floor of the Senate."

Removed from the bill was an authorization for Government restrictions on exports of other than war materials, such as oil, cotton and copper, and it was this provision, favored by the Administration, that aroused the ire of strict neutrality members.

Secretary of State Cordell Hull yesterday, however, indicated Administration acquiescense in the change. Although Hull had favored stricter provisions, he said yesterday that he recognized that neutrality legislation required long study of many problems, and thought the feasible thing to do now is to support the Pittman extension proposal until further studies can be made.

Prospects of America taking a leading step toward proposed oil sanctions by the League of Nations against Italy, by limiting American exports to "normal quantities," appeared to have vanished with the committee's report. Whether the Government might use its moral influence to discourage greater than normal oil shipments to Italy, also appeared in doubt.

The compromise bill as reported yesterday by the Senate Foreign Relations Committee makes three significant changes in the existing neutrality law.

First, it would be mandatory that the President apply the embargo on arms, ammunition and implements of war to other states as they become belligerents, instead of permissive.

Second, the embargo against sale, exportation and transportation of war tools would not apply to American republics when at war against a foreign power.

Third, a prohibition is placed on the sale of bonds, notes, and other securities of belligerent countries in the United States, or the purchase of such securities in the United States. Loans or extension of credits of foreign governments or persons representing them, except ordinary commercial credits and short-time obligations in aid of legal transactions and of a character customarily used in current, commercial business, also would be prohibited.

In addition to these new amendments, the extension of the present law would provide continuance of:

Prohibition against American vessels carrying arms, ammunition and implements of war to belligerents or for transshipment for use of belligerents.

A ban on use of the United States as a base for supplying belligerent ships with arms, ammunition or implements of war.

Restraints on American citizens traveling on belligerent vessels.

In explaining why the committee had not included controversial Section 4 of the Administration bill, providing for an embargo on or restriction of exports of other materials than arms, ammunition and war implements, Senator Pittman said:

"It is evident that there is a wide and sincere difference of opinion, not only as to the general principle involved, but as to the limits to which such embargo should go, and the effect of such an act upon our citizens and upon peace."

Pittman took the view that the existing law has accomplished much by placing an embargo on export, sale and transportation to belligerents of war tools.

"In fact," he said, "it has been the transportation of such materials that has aroused the greatest antagonism of belligerents not in control of the seas. It may be doubted whether a sane belligerent would submarine an American vessel or any passenger vessel if it knew that such vessel was not carrying arms, ammunition or implements of war. This provision being of prime importance, Congress does not intend to take any chance in the law lapsing, and it will lapse within about two weeks unless re-enacted."

Pittman said it was "evident" that if an effort were made to force through general restrictions upon exports, that the controversy would lead to unlimited debate, and result in defeat not only of the controversial amendment, but of the existing law as well.

He said, however, that it is "not the desire of the Administration to prevent sufficient consideration of these controverted points and ample argument thereon."

In lauding the committee's action, Senator Johnson said the group is "entitled to the thanks of the American people" for escaping "what might have put us in another war to enforce peace."

"The so-called neutrality bill so enthusiastically urged by many good but mistaken people, and by some who are neither good nor mistaken, would much more likely have involved us in war than kept us out of it," Johnson said.

"The Foreign Legion in this country has been indefatigable with its extraordinary propaganda to have us lead the way for the League of Nations in imposing sanctions; and, if we had done so, then when we had been securely trapped, we would have heard the old siren song of our 'moral obligation,' and the usual hypocritical demand for the performance of our world duty to enforce those sanctions."

McReynolds, in announcing he will call his House Foreign Affairs Committee together today to follow the Senate committee's lead, said he expected the Senate group to do just what it did.

FHA Insured 31% of Houses, McDonald Says

Agency Backed Third of City Homes Built in Last 7 Months of 1935.

Thirty-one per cent of all one and two family houses constructed in cities of 10,000 and over during the last seven months of 1935 carried mortgages insured by the Federal Housing Administration, Stewart McDonald, FHA administrator, said in a report to Congress yesterday.

The total business transacted by FHA last year amounted to $540,000,000, the report showed, of which $254,000,000 was insured modernization and repair notes and $170,600,000 was home mortgages accepted for insurance. The remainder included mortgages on large-scale housing projects, home mortgages in process of appraisal and mortgages examined and rejected.

During the last six months of the year, McDonald reported, modernization and repair notes insured averaged $27,000,000 per month. He reported that 7,000 local housing committees were co-operating with the FHA.

"The recovery evident during the past year in many lines of industry related to housing indicates that the modernization credit plan of the Federal Housing Administration has acted as a substantial force," McDonald said.

He pointed out that during the last seven months of the year building permits showed an average increase of 207 per cent over the same months of the previous year.

During the year, the report showed, 67,029 mortgages were selected for appraisal and 42,147 were accepted for insurance. A total of 6,957 were in the process of appraisal at the close of the year and the remainder had been rejected.

McDonald saw these results from introduction of the mutual mortgage insurance system:

"The free flow of mortgage money from centers of supply into communities where funds are normally scarce.

"The reduction in mortgage financing charges for large sections of the country, due to the uniform interest rate established by the Administration.

"Improvement in construction practices, influenced by standardized appraisal methods, based on minimum property standards.

"Increased safety both to home buyer and mortgage lender throughout the life of the mortgage as a result of insurance protection and safeguards attending it."

Ship Meningitis Outbreak Curbed

San Francisco, Feb. 12 (U.P.).—An outbreak of spinal meningitis which took the life of one of 67 cadets aboard the training ship California State was reported under control tonight.

Capt. R. C. Dyer informed the California State Nautical School headquarters here late in the day: "No further danger."

A subsequent radio message from the ship, 1,000 miles at sea, northwest of Balboa, Canal Zone, announced that serum for treatment of the disease had been transferred to the California State from the steamer Santa Paula at 1 a. m. today.

The Marine Exchange reported the destroyer Tattnall also had reached the California State. The Tattnall carried physicians and medical equipment.

Italian Claim Of 844 Killed In War Denied

Ethiopia Sets Toll Above 1,500; U. S. Envoy Seeks News of Missionary.

By the Associated Press.

Addis Ababa, Feb. 12.—The Ethiopian government announced the recapture of the town of Kora Ali on the southern front today, and disputed Italian claims that only 844 white Fascist soldiers had died in Ethiopia since the start of the war.

The government declared Ethiopian burial troops had interred the bodies of more than 1,500 white Italians and 5,123 native Italian soldiers after the battle in the mountainous Tembien sector during the last of January.

United States Minister Resident Cornelius Van H. Engert transmitted to officials a request for additional information of the detention of the Rev. Harold Street, American missionary reported held in remote Gamo Province.

His request followed orders from Crown Prince Asfa Wosan, acting for Emperor Haile Selassie, that the local chieftain holding the Rev. Mr. Street and the Rev. John Trewin, a Canadian, release the missionaries.

The Government so far has had no official confirmation the crown prince's order had been carried out.

Mrs. Street, in a letter to the Ethiopian authorities, said her husband had been detained since January 27 after their landlord had attempted to obtain money when the missionaries did not observe a ruling calling for removal of foreigners from Ethiopian danger zones.

"It is also noteworthy that 333 Askaris (native troops) voluntarily surrendered to the Ethiopian command during the Tembien battle," the official report added.

Another communique declared an Italian plane had bombed the town of Waldia, on Lake Ashangi, with bombs falling within 500 feet of a British ambulance.

More than a set of measurements is required to build clothes as we interpret the art of tailoring.

First the proportions and characteristics of the individual are studied. Then the pattern is cut with an eye to equalizing any irregularities. This may demand the slimming of a line that is over-rotund, the adding of breadth to the chest, or perhaps a bit of manipulation to straighten the shoulders.

Knowing that every detail is correct beyond question, a man wears such clothes with complete comfort of mind and body.

The new Spring woolens are for both pattern and texture, fully in keeping with the fine character of our tailoring.

Rope of Sheets, Ladder Save 5 In $15,000 Fire

5-Year-Old Boy Among Rescued; 1 Fireman Overcome, 1 Hurt.

Five persons, one of them a 5-year-old boy, escaped narrowly with lives as fire burned through the three floors of a $15,000 home in Chevy Chase, Md., yesterday.

Four of them slipped down a rope hastily tied together from bed sheets, while the fifth, trapped in his room by flames, was carried down a ladder by firemen.

The saved were Mr. and Mrs. William McEnery, whose home, at 3 Montrose drive, was burned; their son, Eamon McEnery, 5 years old; the McEnery's house guest, Mrs. William C. Whitehead, and a roomer, M. C. Huddleson.

Loss Fixed at $15,000.

The home, the interior of which virtually a complete loss, was the boyhood residence of James H. Pugh, Montgomery County State's attorney. The loss was estimated at $15,000.

In fighting the blaze, "Doc" Oldfield, a Chevy Chase fireman, was overcome by exposure and exhaustion. Donald S. Reid, the deputy Chevy Chase fire chief, was injured. He stepped on a nail.

Mrs. McEnery discovered the fire about 5:45 a. m.

Awakened by Smoke.

"I was awakened by smoke in our bedroom," she said. "I called my husband and we took our son and ran into Mrs. Whitehead's room.

"The smoke was blinding and we could hardly tell where we were walking. With Mrs. Whitehead we made a rope of the bedclothes and climbed out of the window onto a balcony. From there we were able to lower ourselves to the ground."

Mr. McEnery, an economist employed by the Securities Exchange Commission, attempted to go to Huddleson's aid, but was blocked by smoke and fire. Firemen reached the room with a ladder and carried Huddleson down.

Court Curb

meanwhile by Senator Robert D. Carey (Republican), Wyoming, "by request." It proposed to reorganize the Farm Credit Administration, placing it under a five-man board, comprising the Secretary of the Treasury and four others to be named by the President.

Flaying the Supreme Court as a "continuous constitutional convention," Senator Norris compared his own stand to that of Lincoln when the Supreme Court rendered its Dred Scott decision. Norris declared he did not propose resistance of the court's decision, but an overruling of the decision by constitutional methods.

"The people can change the Congress," Norris shouted, "but only God can change the Supreme Court."

The Nebraska liberal said the court's decision in effect "amended the Constitution," and the court in rendering it was "itself unconstitutional." He said three different bodies are exercising the Nation's legislative functions—the House and Senate, elected by and responsible to the people, and the Supreme Court.

"The members of the Supreme Court," he said, "are not elected by anybody. They are responsible to nobody; yet they hold dominion over everybody."

Asserting that Congress "has the power to remedy the situation," Norris, who already has introduced a resolution requiring two-thirds of the court to rule an act unconstitutional, proposed yesterday that Congress require constitutional decisions of the court be unanimous.

The Nebraskan, author of the TVA act now awaiting a Supreme Court opinion, declared:

"If the laws of Congress should be sustained as constitutional unless they are unconstitutional beyond a reasonable doubt, it would follow as night follows day that any decision of the Supreme Court holding a law unconstitutional would have to be agreed to by all of the members of the Supreme Court.

"That is not unreasonable. Congress can provide for it under the existing Constitution if it will; and that is no disrespect to the court. That is no disrespect to anyone."

Insisting a constitutional amendment was "impractical," he said under ordinary circumstances it "would take years" and that "in a case like the one decided a few days ago, wherein the Supreme Court held the AAA unconstitutional, would destroy any benefit that could come if we resorted to that kind of procedure, because before it could be culminated agriculture would be dead, the remedy would not at least be able to resurrect dead men, and its purpose, therefore, even when accomplished, would have been nullified before the accomplishment took place."

Utopia Administration Costly

further from low cost even than it is on the basis of the Government's own cost figures.

Tugwell says that as his program progresses the percentage of overhead cost will decrease and that he hopes to be able to bring administrative expenses down to 10 per cent of the total spent. Incidentally, some shifting of funds from allotments for rehabilitation or relief to the administrative allotment soon will have to be made. Only $22,650,000 was allotted by President Roosevelt for the administrative expense of the whole Resettlement Administration.

Management Price of Loan.

Many of the nearly 10,000 field employes on Tugwell's pay roll are engaged in investigating individuals to whom loans and grants are being made. They are assisted by local volunteer committees composed of ministers, merchants and other leading citizens. The resettlement workers and these committees go over every detail of the personal histories of families seeking assistance.

Thus far about 420,000 rural families have been given loans or grants. Loans are made for equipment, seeds, animals, fertilizer, whatever is needed on the farm. The loans, ranging from $200 to $800, are paid out to recipients as needed. The borrowers agree to pay them back in two to five years with interest at 5 per cent. But they agree to more than that. They agree to have their personal and business affairs rigidly regulated by resettlement workers. The housewife must agree to a home management plan laid down for her, and the husband must agree to follow a farm management plan.

Premium on Improvidence.

Loans are being made to families that possibly may pay them back. There are other families that are looked upon as being hopeless. These are being made outright gifts. If a family is a good risk and sufficiently thrifty it may borrow money at 5 per cent. If its credit is not good, it will get the money anyway, with no obligation to return it, and, of course, no interest charge.

A total of $88,000,000 has been loaned under this plan by the old Federal Emergency Relief Administration and by the Resettlement Administration. More than $5,000,000 has been paid out in outright gifts. Of the money loaned, about $9,000,000 has been paid back.

Some of the money is being loaned to families moving off the 9,000,000 acres of land the Resettlement Administration is buying and retiring from use for cash crops. It is estimated that 22,000 families will be moved from this land. Some of them will shift for themselves. Some of them will be assisted in settling on new farms. Others will be moved into the agricultural communities previously described in these articles.

Office Cost Major Expense.

Besides the offices in Washington, occupying all or parts of 19 buildings, the Resettlement Administration has 12 regional offices, an office in every State and organizations at the sites of projects. The costs of these offices are a part of the huge administrative item.

The following table shows the money available for each of the various divisions of the Resettlement Administration and the amounts already spent or obligated:

	Available	Obligated

Bank Reserves Excess Brings Inflation Fear

Advisory Council Renews Warning of Danger to Federal Board.

By the Associated Press.

The Federal Advisory Council yesterday renewed its warning that excess bank reserves hold possibilities of inflation, and added a recommendation that they be greatly reduced or eliminated.

A spokesmen for the Federal Reserve Board, which received the recommendation without public comment, said the council's position was virtually identical with the one it took last November.

At that time the council reported it was "strongly of the opinion that, in order to obviate the probability of an undue and dangerous credit inflation, it is desirable from every point of view to eliminate or at least greatly reduce the excess reserve now being carried by the system."

3 Billions in Excess.

(Under the law, banks in the Federal Reserve system must keep a percentage of their deposits in liquid form with Federal Reserve banks. At present they have $3,090,000,000 in excess of legal requirements on deposit with the Federal Reserve. This represents a surplus of loanable bank funds, and some economists say it could provide a base for ten times that amount in credit.)

The council consists of one representative from each of the 12 Federal Reserve districts. It has advisory functions only. In November, it told the old Federal Reserve Board the excess reserves could be reduced by two methods:

1. Sale of Government bonds by Federal Reserve Banks. (Commerbanks presumably would use their idle money to purchase the Government securities placed on sale. The Federal Reserve now holds about $2,240,000,000 in Government obligations.)

2. Action by the Federal Reserve Board to raise reserve requirements. (Doubling of the present requirements, it was said, would practically wipe out the present surplus of loanable funds, or excess reserves.)

Board Took no Action.

The advisory council preferred the first method last November, but following that meeting, the board declined to pursue either of the recommended steps. Since then, however, there have been three developments affecting the situation:

1. The Federal Reserve Board stiffened stock market margin requirements by 20 per cent, a move interpreted by some as intended to apply the brakes to any boom in security prices.

2. The Treasury is keeping more than $500,000,000 of Government funds on deposit in Federal Reserve banks, rather than in commercial banks. Observers say this policy has the effect of decreasing excess reserves by that amount.

3. About $30,000,000 in gold has been shipped from the country recently. The former constant stream of incoming gold was said to have had much to do with the jump in excess reserves.

Sees Considerable Recovery.

The council was represented as feeling there is considerable evidence of a recovery in business; and of an increase in prices generally and particularly in the security market, with the possibility that a too rapid advance could easily develop into a new wave of speculation, such as existed in 1929.

The constant pressure of the present excess reserves, council members were said to feel, has a distinct tendency to foster and encourage speculative activity. The council was represented as believing that even with complete elimination of such reserves, the banking system still would be prepared to meet any and all legitimate and proper demands for bank credit.

The council, it is understood, also took up the question of credit which banks may extend on registered securities. This question is being considered by the Reserve Board, which will shortly issue regulation "U," which will govern the rates.

Ignorance and Lack of Funds Held Menace to City's Health

Medical Officers Told of Growing Problem in Report on Social Hygiene, Made After Survey by New York Expert.

With health items trimmed deeply by the Bureau of the Budget, the 1937 District budget is now receiving Congressional consideration. The Washington Post desires that this city have the best health department in the Nation. This is one of a series of articles designed to show Congress the District's health needs.

By Gerald G. Gross.

"If public opinion can be aroused, there will be a prospect of an appropriation commensurate with the gravity and extent of this problem. The lives, the happiness, the welfare of the people of this country are fully as important as chinch bugs, fruit flies, cattle, hogs and apple orchards."

The above is an extract from a speech by Representative Everett M. Dirksen (Republican), Illinois, on the floor of the House last Friday. I'll come back to it later.

Elwood Street, director of public welfare, called officials of institutions under the board's jurisdiction into his office yesterday to hear Dr. Walter Clarke read a report. Dr. Clarke is director of the Bureau of Social Hygiene, New York City Health Department. He and Dr. M. J. Exner, as representatives of the American Social Hygiene Association, recently conducted a "limited study of the medical aspects of social hygiene in Washington, D. C." Yesterday's report was based on that study, which was made at the request of the Capital's Welfare Board and Health Department and sponsored by the District Social Hygiene Society.

Findings Pertinent.

Since venereal disease is the greatest menace to public health in this city—not excluding tuberculosis—since the number of cases of syphilis reported to the Health Department has increased from 116 in 1919 to 5,120 in 1933 and since funds for control of this blight are as inadequate as public ignorance of the condition is widespread, consideration of the doctors' findings and conclusions would seem pertinent.

It was found that:

A person suffering from a "social disease" and in dire need of hospitalization discovers that it is almost impossible to receive the accommodations to which he is entitled and upon which his life, not to mention the well-being of people with whom he comes into contact may depend.

Not all children admitted to the Receiving Home for Children are given medical examinations, although some of them are found subsequently to be gonorrhea-infected.

"A study of the quarters of the Receiving Home," says the report, "indicated that the home is not a proper place to keep a child with an infectious disease. It was reported that Gallinger Hospital has accepted from the home children having other infectious conditions, but has refused to accept children having acute gonorrhea unless a child was so ill that bed care in a hospital was imperative."

Inspection of the syphilis clinic at Gallinger revealed "a situation in which able and conscientious personnel is trying to render worth-while service under most unfavorable conditions."

In the discussion which followed Dr. Clarke's presentation of his summarized report, of which only a few highlights have been cited here, the following salient facts were brought into the light:

That Washington is lagging far behind New York and other large American cities in attacking the venereal disease emergency, an emergency which is rendered no less acute by the tendency to disregard or "hush" it either in drawing room or appropriations chamber.

5 Per Cent Infected.

That 5 per cent of the patients in the new children's tuberculosis sanitarium at Glenn Dale, Md., are also infected with gonorrhea and there are no facilities for the proper treatment of this auxiliary affliction. This situation is permitted to prevail despite the fact that, in some instances, the child's venereal infection is in more urgent need of attention than his tuberculosis.

That 18 to 20 cases are discovered annually at the National Training School for Boys, which does not even have an infirmary.

That, in general, little is done—due in great measure to shortage of funds—in Washington's institutions of incarceration to guard against the spreading of venereal disease among inmates who, in a day or a week or a month, will be returned to society as potential messengers of death and misery.

It is hardly necessary to state that Congressman Dirksen, who is an aggressive member of the House District Committee, was referring to the dread "V. D." problem in that speech about humans and hogs.

It came in connection with debate on a proposal to appropriate $80,000 for maintenance of the Division of Venereal Diseases, U. S. Public Health Service, of which $19,420 would go for personal services in the District.

Urges Appropriation.

"The Federal Government health agencies should be fortified with whatever funds are necessary and carry on a vigorous and determined campaign against venereal disease," said Dirksen. "It is one of the tragedies of this enlightened age that prudery, false delicacy, and false shame has limited the campaign to placards posted in public toilets in the nature of warnings.

"Do we use such tactics in dealing with tuberculosis? No. The reason for the success of anti-tuberculosis compaigns is because we have been giving the matter pitiless publicity. Do we use such tactics in dealing with cancer? Indeed not. It has been dragged into the open, and the fight against it goes steadily on.

"Then why this ghastly attitude against a scourge that is 10 times more serious than cancer and far more serious than tuberculosis?"

Copeland Backs Meeting

sential in a "civilized" community, and there is "a crying need" for additional trained health personnel.

The American University Citizens Association voted to urge a substantial increase by Congress in Health Department appropriations and indorsed the mass meting.

Indications that the mass meeting, sponsored by the District Medical Society, will attract a large throng grew yesterday as the Merchants and Manufacturers Association offered its support. Thomas E. Lodge, president of the Federation of Citizens Associations, delivered a radio address urging residents to attend.

The Merchants and Manufacturers Association joined the Board of Trade in throwing the influence of its full membership behind the assembly. Numerous other civic, professional, business and other groups also will be represented.

"The Federation of Citizens Associations is vitally interested in obtaining from Congress an adequate appropriation for the Health Department and the hospitals maintained by municipal government," said Lodge. "The federation has directed its health committee to use its best offices to obtain replacement in the budget of the amount recommended by the Commissioners of the District for these purposes.

"Many people are deeply concerned with the many deaths occurring as the result of traffic accidents, yet in the District of Columbia last year, there were almost five times as many deaths from tuberculosis and, I tell you without pride, that Washington stands second in the United States in its per capita death rate in tuberculosis cases.

"To correct these situations and to obtain an adequate control of tuberculosis and other contagious disease cases, to provide a proper inspection of places serving the public food, and to take other steps designed to control and to decrease the number of sick in Washington is the purpose of this mass meeting."

Pope Eulogized At Observance Of Coronation

Notable Gathering Attends 14th Anniversary Rites at Catholic U.

Before a distinguished gathering yesterday in the Shrine of the Immaculate Conception at Catholic University, Pope Pius XI was eulogized for his "spiritual power" at solemn high mass in observance of the fourteenth anniversary of his coronation in Vatican City.

In attendance at the colorful and impressive rites were many of the Diplomatic Corps and official life, as well as leading churchmen of the Catholic Church, and the Most Rev. John B. Peterson, Bishop of Manchester, N. H., who reviewed the history of the papacy, and extolled "our own beloved Pius XI."

Most Rev. Amleto Giovanni Cicognani, apostolic delegate to the United States, presided at the mass. Celebrant was the Right Rev. Mgr. Patrick J. McCormick, the acting rector of Catholic University.

Chaplains to the apostolic delegate included the Right Rev. Mgr. David T. O'Dwyer, Right Rev. Mgr. John A. Ryan and Right Rev. Mgr. Peter Guilday, of the university faculty.

Other officers of the mass were Rev. Robert Fleicksteiner, deacon, and Rev. Raymond Connolly, subdeacon. In charge of the ceremonies was the Rev. Edward Roelker.

Similar observances in honor of Pope Pius XI, sixtieth successor of St. Peter, were held in many other national capitals throughout the world.

The procession of the faculties, clerical, religious and lay students formed in the nave at 10:15 a. m. The marchers then proceeded to the crypt of the shrine, where the religious ceremony was held.

Members of the faculty and the senior class of the college of arts and sciences and the school of engineering and architecture wore their academic costumes.

Pope Marks Anniversary.

Vatican City, Feb. 12 (AP).—Priests and laymen thronged the halls of the Vatican today as Pope Pius celebrated the fourteenth anniversary of his coronation in a colorful celebration.

Amid shouts of "Viva Il Papa" and "Multos Annos" (may you live many years longer), the pontiff was borne to the Sistine Chapel where mass was said by Cardinal Nasalli-Rocca, the first prince of the church named after the Pope's accession.

The Pope blessed the spectators, raising his hand above his white cassock and vivid red mantle. He wore the jeweled triple crown on his head.

After the mass, he retired to his apartments where hundreds of congratulatory messages poured in.

Pope Pius has "commanded the world's esteem and gained a lasting place in the minds and hearts of men," said Bishop Ralph Hayes, rector of the American College in Rome, in a eulogy calling attention to the beginning of the fifteenth year of the holy father's reign.

Leaders in Jewry Will Convene Here

Leaders of orthodox Jewry will gather in Washington tomorrow for the three-day silver jubilee convention of the Mizrachi Organization of the United States and Canada, attending religious services in the evening in all local synagogues, dedicated to the accomplishments of the Mizrachi Zionists in building a Jewish homeland in Palestine.

Rabbi Meyer Berlin, world president of the organization, arrived in New York yesterday from Palestine and will be escorted to Washington tomorrow by a group of prominent Zionists.

All the sessions of the convention, which will open formally Sunday, will be held in the Jewish Community Center. The Rev. Louis Novick is chairman of the arrangements committee for the men's convention and Mrs. Rose Cayton, of the women's.

Three Get Life Terms In King's Assassination

Aix-en-Provence, France, Feb. 12 (AP).—Three Croats were convicted today of complicity in the assassination of King Alexander of Yugoslavia and were sentenced to terms of life imprisonment.

The prosecution had demanded death at the guillotine for the three, but the jury found extenuating circumstances.

Warship Limit Is Seen as U. S., Britain Agree

4 Powers Could Build Two 35,000-Ton Vessels Each by Pact.

Copyright, 1936, by the United Press.

London, Feb. 12.—An agreement for limitation of battleships is in sight, it was stated tonight after a meeting of British and American delegates rejuvenated the moribund Naval Conference.

The proposed agreement would limit Britain, United States, France and Italy to construction of two capital ships of 35,000 tons and 14-inch guns for the six-year duration of the prospective treaty.

The four powers agreed previously on cruisers, aircraft carriers, submarines and other categories of war vessels.

Leaders of the British and American delegations conferred at the foreign office after the British had talked with members of the French delegation. The French are consulting the cabinet in Paris, after which the proposal will be reconsidered.

Sole remaining major difference between the four powers is the method of approach to be used for possible inclusion of Japan, Germany and perhaps Russia in the naval limitation agreement.

Britain has proposed to France that the four powers initial the projected qualitative limitation pact after which Britain, as the inviting naval power, would ask Japan, Russia and Germany to adhere to the treaty by next January 1.

France has proposed that after the signing by the four powers, Britain should present the draft for approval to Japan, Germany and Russia, in that order. Some delegates have derived the impression France might refuse subsequently to sign the treaty unless the three outside powers join the agreement, instead of being content as a last resort to have a four-power treaty with an "escape clause" which would operate if any nonsignatory power began building warships in excess of the limits fixed by the treaty powers.

Post Carriers To Hold Annual Dinner Tonight

George M. Cohan, Ricardo Cortez and Other Stars Will Entertain.

George M. Cohan, Ricardo Cortez and the cream of the talent at local theaters, radio stations and night clubs will donate their services tonight to make 300 boys happy.

It will be the annual banquet of The Washington Post carrier boys in the ballroom of the Willard Hotel. Another group will be entertained at the Spanish Villa, 1208 U street northwest.

For three hours these youngsters, who have battled through the early morning hours of the Capital's coldest winter of several decades to deliver their papers on time, will relax to enjoy one of the greatest parades of entertainment offered Washingtonians this season.

This is to be the boys' own party. The only "outsiders" will be a few guests from the executive and circulation departments of The Post.

Array of Stage Talent.

America's favorite actor-playwright, George M. Cohan, will greet the carriers before going on the boards at the National Theater in "Dear Mr. Darling."

Cortez, the movie star now making a personal appearance at the Earle, is scheduled to appear at the banquet with the comedian, Nick Copeland. Also from the Earle will come Audrey Sieber, mistress of ceremonies, who will introduce Bert Granoff, favorite local tenor, and the Nonchalants, three acrobatic comedians.

Loew's Fox is contributing Johnny Burke, soldier monologist and story teller; Ken Harvey, banjoist, and Ruthie Barnes, dancer. They will be accompanied on the piano by Tom Gannon, Fox orchestra accompanist. That theater is also contributing the uniformed cadet band, directed by Capt. John McKenzie.

Two magicians will keep the boys mystified during the evening. Harry Baker, who is manager of the Wilson Steamship Line when not pulling rabbits out of hats, will show how an amateur does it. Milbourne Christopher, president and youngest member of the society of magicians, is giving a professional turn to the disappearing needles. Christopher comes from the Mayfair Cafe of All Nations as does Michael, the boy accordionist.

Night Club Entertainers.

Other night club entertainers include a dance team from the Lotus; Don Rice, comedian now playing at La Paree, and Buddy Shaner, who sings with Emory Daugherty's La Paree Orchestra. Shaner is a former Eastern High athlete.

The radio stations are contributing talent generously. WJSV is sending Bill Bivens and his Hill Billies and Arch McDonald, sports broadcaster. WOL will be represented by Arch Brown, pianologist; John Adams, the harmonica king, and J. F. Carter, imitator. Gordon Hittenmark, of WRC, will be there as well as Uncle Zip's Troupe, which will contribute crossroads store comedy and music.

The Right Word.

Since the gentleman from Texas, Mr. Blanton, has used the word "asinine" in the House and escaped reproach from the Chair, the community should feel grateful for the suggestion and glad of the implied license to employ so pungent an adjective. Mr. Blanton has cast his word upon the waters, and back it comes. For the "little Red rider," which Mr. Blanton maneuvered so successfully past the drowsing eyes of Congress last year, which has made the school system of the Nation's Capital the laughing stock of the country and which strikes at the very basis of public education, is asininity in naked perfection.

The grounds for this assertion are incontestable. Representative Sisson, of New York, summarized them well in initiating the admirable movement to revise the rider in this year's District appropriation act. He emphasized that, instead of showing students how communism denies the fundamentals of free democracy, the ban works rather to prick up their curiosities and render them easy prey to insidious, curbstone propaganda.

Mr. Sisson also demonstrated the demoralizing effect of the present restrictions on teachers. Required, in receiving their salaries, to pledge that they do not "teach or advocate" communism, and uncertain as to the precise definition of these words, they have leaned over backward to avoid perjury. The result is that all references to communism have been banned and chapters of textbooks in geography, history, civics and other subjects are skipped over when they deal with Russia.

The chairman of the House District Committee is ready at the next meeting to call up a motion drawn by Mr. Sisson to amend the rider. Wisely, Mrs. Norton declares that there is no need for a public hearing. All the ludicrous facts have already been given the widest publicity. The bill, then, should receive action at the next District day, scheduled for February 24. That day will be memorable if it spell finis for this truly asinine legislation.

When To Lock Garages.

Because persons involved in serious automobile accidents often receive injuries which might affect their skill in driving or, if unhurt, are suspect of carelessness, Assistant Traffic Director Eldridge recommends that they be required to pass traffic tests before being permitted behind steering wheels again. He further proposes that flagrant violators of the rules of the road be subjected to written examinations to determine precisely how much they know about the laws they violate.

These are constructive suggestions, so far as they go, but they savor of locking the garage after the coupe has been stolen. To eliminate reckless driving, strict examinations are needed before licenses are granted.

Mr. Eldridge makes a strong point when he urges that drivers applying for renewals of their permits be subjected to re-examinations. At present renewals are handed out merely on presentation of expired permits. No inquiry is made as to the physical fitness of the motorist, despite the fact that his sight or hearing may have been impaired since his first permit was issued. It is pointed out that more rigorous and more frequent examinations would require a considerable addition to the traffic department's staff, but this extra expenditure would be a small price to pay for an almost certain improvement in traffic conditions.

A corollary to careful inspection of drivers is the uncomprising elimination of all who, though having once been granted licenses, are unable or unwilling longer to abide by the regulations. Last year more than 1,000 driving permits were revoked or suspended, and more vigorous use of this weapon against reckless driving is in prospect. Since January 16, for example, permits of 159 drivers involved in accidents or arrests have been suspended for speeding alone. Slowly the public is being made to realize that the traffic regulations mean what they say and that ignorance is no excuse for their violation. The traffic department, the police and the courts are to be commended for the results already achieved. In their persistent pursuit of this policy lies Washington's hope for safer transit.

Confusion And Vituperation.

Herbert Hoover performed a dual service in his address at Portland, Oreg., last night. In stating that "personalities and mud-slinging never clarified a national issue," he set an admirable standard for forthcoming campaign speeches from either camp. And in devoting the major portion of his remarks to the theme of national confusion he unerringly placed his finger on the weakest spot in the Administration's defenses.

Mr. Hoover's observations were doubtless prepared without any reference to the speech made by Secretary Ickes at Springfield, Ill., on Tuesday. But they could not have been more devastating to the flamboyant oratory of the latter had the former President's remarks been written with those of the present Secretary of the Interior before him.

Both speakers, naturally, connected Abraham Lincoln with their themes, but with suggestive differences. Mr. Hoover asked that campaign discussions be held "to the intellectual honesty which Lincoln kept in all his fateful years." Mr. Ickes, in one of many purple passages, urged that "we despise those political untouchables who at night slink from their garbage heaps to besmirch the character of every champion of an improved social order."

Such empty billingsgate, from the lips of a man entrusted with very important national authority, goes far to emphasize the justice of Mr. Hoover's contentions regarding the muddled thinking of the Administration. When Mr. Ickes argues that Abraham Lincoln was abused, that Franklin Roosevelt is abused and that therefore Roosevelt is another Lincoln, it takes no Euclid to detect deficiencies in the logic. Yet such analogies, with half-hysterical references to "garbage heap" opponents, go far to define the present content of New Deal thinking.

"Few national problems," says Mr. Hoover, "have been really solved" by the Roosevelt Administration. This is incontestable, even though in the deeper sense few national problems are ever "really solved" by any government. The Emancipation Proclamation, to choose an example appropriate to the theme of Lincoln's birthday, certainly unfolded as many issues as it eliminated. And the same, since Mr. Hoover is speaking, could be said of the Prohibition Amendment.

But while it is futile to anticipate final governmental solution of major national problems, it is entirely reasonable to expect continuous progress in the techniques employed by government in dealing with the issues of the day. And in such techniques there has been, during the past three years, retrogression rather than progress. Whether we take the establishment of a non-political civil service as the necessary foundation, or the provision of co-ordinated governmental planning as a final keystone, there has been no orderly pattern of development, but only a long series of contradictory and often meaningless sketches. Rarely has the art of administration been so neglected as it is in the United States today.

This administrative confusion is not improved when responsible administrators seek to conceal the issues behind vituperation and abuse. Nothing but spleen is served, to quote Mr. Ickes again, by referring to critics of present maladministration as "jackals" which "resort to the garbage heap for material with which to bespatter the leader who is fighting to improve conditions."

Less talk of jackals, less talk of cure-alls, and more attention to scientific and non-emotional government, would make the Administration less vulnerable to the charge of confusion which Mr. Hoover launched in temperate but telling language last night.

The Winter Of '36.

This winter, the most severe in years, has offered open season for adventures and thrilling rescues. Marooned train passengers, isolated islanders, and overly-fearless mountain climbers have all come in for their share of headlines. Seven CCC boys have just been saved from an icy death in Cape Cod Bay; two men are dead on an ice floe in Lake Michigan, while their companion is barely recovering in a hospital; 11 Government workers, marooned in an Ohio River houseboat, are said to be doomed if a nearby ice dam breaks; and practically the whole of a Grand Haven, Mich., newspaper staff have been snowbound in Grand Rapids, forced to put their paper together by long-distance telephone.

Not all the facilities of wireless, airplanes and alert Coast Guardsmen can eliminate entirely the risks which make these rescues so thrilling, which lift them above dull routine. Even the best-laid plans of men and machines come to grief when pitted against impenetrable snowstorms, frozen rivers and howling gales. Then it is that man must rely on his own ingenuity and, harking back thousands of years, bring all his intuitive cunning to bear in keeping the first law of nature.

It is impossible, unless one has been through the ordeal, to imagine the mental agony of those hoping to be rescued from what appears to be certain death. One of the CCC boys saved off Cape Cod said: "We really were scared, but we kept making wisecracks so that the others wouldn't know that we were scared." No grandstand heroics in that statement and no classical conclusions about life's uncertainties—just a simple picture of seven boys, staving off death with wisecracks!

In after years, few veterans of the winter of '36 will be able to top this story with a better one.

Stock Market Inflation.

Some months ago the former Director of the Budget, Lewis W. Douglas, cited the phenomenally rapid rise in stock market averages as evidence that inflation was not merely in prospect, but actually under way. The evidence which Mr. Douglas then cited is certainly not less telling today.

Undoubtedly the recent marked improvement in business, the increased earnings and the brighter prospects of many companies, account in part for the upward movement of stocks. Nevertheless, the extent and the rapidity of the rise suggest that inflationary influences are helping to boost quotations regardless of real earning capacity.

It is, for instance, significant that inflationary talk in Congress, and demands that the bonus be paid off in greenbacks, have assisted the recent advance. Former President Hoover's testimony in a California court this week, supporting the petition of Stanford University for permission to invest trustee funds in common stocks and other equities, as a hedge against possible inflation, has also been a "bullish" market factor.

Incidents of this sort plainly indicate that the stock boom is, as Mr. Hoover affirmed in his speech last night, partly due to fear of inflation. Confidence in the future would not of itself justify a rise in the average prices of industrial common stocks to the 1926 level. As Mr. Hoover points out, we did not have ten million unemployed in 1926; our foreign trade was then flourishing; our budget was balanced, and our currency was stable.

As a matter of fact, neither fear of inflation, nor improvement in business, nor these factors in combination fully explain the boom. An important element is the monetary and credit policies of the Government. These have built up a great volume of excess reserves, created large additional deposits in banks and brought interest rates down to abnormally low levels. The result has been a great and growing pressure to invest unused funds at a time when the volume of new security issues has been very limited. Under such circumstances, the prices of both bonds and stocks would tend to rise rapidly even if investors were not in any way alarmed about the future of the dollar.

A factor of importance in the stock market inflation of 1928-29 was the fact that many holders of securities, who would otherwise have sold out at high prices, refrained from doing so because of the heavy taxes that they would have had to pay. The same factor is operating now. The capital gains tax, which is improperly called income tax, would, if lower, mean more sales, more revenue for the Government, and a tendency to keep the supply of securities better related to the price level.

In the present stock market boom are found evidences not simply of a fear of inflation, but of the existence of a particular kind of inflation. The action taken by the Federal Reserve Board in raising margin requirements is an indirect recognition of the danger. But the remedy does not seem adequate.

The inflationary movement in the stock market has not been due to speculative use of bank credit, but to employment of the resources created by the Administration's financial and monetary policies. Such being the case, the rational conclusion is that uncontrollable inflation may break out in other quarters unless deficit financing and monetary manipulation are definitely abandoned in favor of sound fiscal policies, based upon a stable currency.

Signals Off?

Harvard's crimson must be a shade or two more flushed these days. It will be remembered that something more than a year ago the broad-beamed Ernst Hanfstaengl, known to his fellows of the Class of 1909 as "Putzy," offered $1,000 to his venerable alma mater. His thought was to give a Harvard undergraduate a year's study at the University of Munich. But Harvard refused the offer from Hitler's confidential adviser, with the indignant remark that it could not think of accepting a gift from one associated with "a political party which has . . . struck at principles we believe fundamental to universities throughout the world." The rejection met with Nation-wide applause.

Recently Harvard has been looking forward to its 300th anniversary next September. It was decided to mark the occasion by establishing several "national scholarships." Form letters outlining the plan and soliciting financial support for it were mailed out to the alumni body, which includes, of course, Ernst Hanfstaengl '09. His reply, recently come to hand, is a gem. "Putzy" asks whether he is to understand that Harvard has now modified its stand in regard to his earlier offer to underwrite a scholarship. If so, he is delighted: more than that, he offers to increase it ten-fold.

Quite evidently, someone up at Cambridge has got the signals mixed. And an intentional grounding of the ball would seem to be the only tactical way out. The penalty for that may be only five yards retreat on a football field, but it's rather more embarrassing in University Hall.

Borah's Republicanism.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Mr. Borah, in a plain-spoken attack on the Ohio Republican organization, invited G. O. P. aspirants who were opposed to his policies to file in the May 12 primaries, in the interest of the people of Ohio, their choice for President, thereby eliminating "favorite sons." By this method, he assures us, it would give the people in the several States a "square deal."

Mr. Borah's statement is not clear to the average Republican. I believe the thought that is uppermost in many Republican minds is how Mr. Borah can dictate to the Republican Party after all these years of deviating from the Republican doctrines. Mr. Borah has been elected many times under the guise of the Republican Party, but never a true Republican. He has bolted the party at various times when the party really needed him. Now he is proclaiming long and loud that he should be the Republicans' choice.

Well, Mr. Borah, you didn't need the Republicans for the past 30 years—now they don't need you. And you can take a walk in Cleveland if you don't like the way we do things there. A REPUBLICAN.

Vindicating The Groundhog.

Election Fraud Precaution.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Now that a national election is in the offing and the Senate is contemplating passing a bill appropriating $100,000 in anticipation of "election frauds," it might be well—strictly for historical purposes, of course—to quote a paragraph or so from J. L. DeLolme's "The Constitution of England," written in 1784, but revised in 1817. The quotation is from the 1817 edition, page 61:

The principal precautions, taken by the law, to insure the freedom of elections, are, that any candidate, who, after the date of the writ, or even after the vacancy, shall have given entertainments to the electors of the place, or to any of them, in order to his being elected, shall be incapable of serving for that place in Parliament; and that if any person gives, or promises to give, any money, employment, or reward, to a voter, in order to influence his vote, he, as well as the voter himself, shall be condemned to pay a fine of £500 and forever disqualified to vote and hold any office in a corporation—the faculty, however, being reserved to both, of procuring indemnity for their own offense, by discovering some other offender of the same kind.

I refrain from commenting on the possibilities of a law of this practical nature in this country at this time. GROVER AYERS.

In Defense Of "Scholastic."

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: The Scholastic Magazine and the fine work it has accomplished is well known to anyone interested in creative educational values. If it has seemed too liberal to a few individuals, it is to be remembered that an open and compassionate mind is the highest reward real education can hope for. Education will always be exploring new fields, this process cannot be arrested if education is to advance.

I do not feel that Mr. George E. Sullivan in bringing the charges he does against the magazine truly expresses the feeling in the majority of Washington homes although this is the impression he has been trying to convey.

I suggest that those persons appreciative of the real value of the scholastic organization, who feel as I do that the work it accomplishes is important to education, write to Dr. Ballou or the Board of Education so that both viewpoints of public opinion may be fairly represented.

One Way To Feed Birds.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Being puzzled how to feed the birds while snow was falling, I thought out an idea. I got from the butcher a large piece of suet, which I tied securely to a long piece of string, together with a piece of bread with seed imbedded in it.

I then threw the food from my window into a tree, where the string caught on a branch. In half an hour the seeds were being devoured by the birds. They had a fine meal all day in spite of the falling snow. I. V.

Industrial Unionism Called Subterfuge

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: I read with great interest the notably fine editorial on the subject of the conflict within the ranks of organized labor in your issue of February 5. For its lucidity, fairness and sound understanding it has impressed me as being a most useful contribution to the discussion of a serious crisis within the labor movement that is important to all citizens, whether they are labor unionists or not.

Although many years have elapsed since I worked at my trade and took an active part in the union of my own craft and in the trades union movement in general, I have always retained my interest in the movement and regarded myself as belonging to it. During the years of the World War and afterward it was my privilege to be closely associated with Samuel Gompers and to serve him from time as occasion arose.

Since the passing of Gompers, I have followed the career of his successor, Mr. Green, with sympathetic interest and genuine respect. Lacking some of the qualities with which our memories of Gompers are associated, being less brilliant, and less capable of dramatic effect, he has not fallen below the high level of the record of his predecessor in any of the essentials of wise and statesmanlike leadership. Having heard many of the most effective speeches made by Gompers, including some upon the same great issue that now divides the labor movement, I have no hesitation in saying that the address which President Green delivered before the convention of the United Mine Workers a week ago compares favorably with the finest of the speeches of Gompers in his prime. I am quite certain that Sam Gompers would have applauded it and been proud of it. And I am confident that some of those who jeered Mr. Green when he delivered it will admire the speech, and regret their jeers of the speaker, in days not far distant when they read in calm leisure what they heard in fury and impatience.

I do not intend here to discuss the relative merits of craft or trade unionism on the one hand and industrial unionism on the other. That is only involved in the present conflict as a shibboleth—I might say quite fairly a subterfuge. Time was when we had a real conflict upon the theoretical and practical differences between the two types of unionism, but long since the policy of the American Federation of Labor has made full provision for the full and free expression of whatever development away from craft organization to industrial organization has ensued, whether such development has been due to the urge of great underlying economic forces, inherent in mass production, or to ideological and intellectual factors. There is not the least obstacle to the functioning of industrial unions within the American Federation of Labor on equal terms with craft unions.

Having regard to the relation of the committee for industrial organization, under which the regrettable split in the ranks of American labor is being effected, to the workers in the automobile industry, as represented by the Cleveland Auto Council, under the auspices of which Mr. Lewis recently spoke, it is worth while noting that the charter granted to the Automobile Workers' International Union by the American Federation of Labor permits the organization of all except an insignificant number of workers in that industry in a single union. President Green claims, I think, that the charter gives this one union jurisdiction over 98 per cent of all the workers employed in every branch of automobile production. Personally, I should estimate the number of those not included as less than 2 per cent. Surely, here is industrial unionism within the federation.

From the point of view of those who have advocated industrial organization for greater efficiency, to meet the developments of mass machine production with its progressive elimination of the advantages once associated with individual skill, the action of Mr. Lewis and his present associates is regrettable beyond anything that has happened in the American labor movement in 25 years. Essentially it is a reactionary step.

Looking back over more than 35 years of personal association and observation, and applying the knowledge acquired thereby to the present situation, I cannot blind myself to the fact that those who from outside the ranks of the organized workers are now applauding Mr. Lewis and his associates are of the same general type—in many cases, indeed, the same persons—who have joined in every attempt to weaken the A. F. of L. and the established labor movement in general. They applauded the Western Federation of Miners, and, later on, the I. W. W. with its "cartwheel diagram," for political reasons, precisely as they now acclaim the action of Mr. Lewis and his friends for political reasons.

The aim is to make the labor movement of this country political rather than economic. The idea of "one big union," upon which the I. W. W. was based, bore little relation to economic action as that has been understood by the labor movement of this country. It was the achievement of a political end, the building up of a political machine. There are lots of reasons why this should appeal to the miners with greater force than it appeals to workers in other branches of industry. There are what may be termed the immediately urgent reasons, such as the concern of the miners for the Guffey act. And there are the more general reasons arising out of the long-standing difficulties of the mining industry. But for American labor as a whole, and, I feel sure, for the miners in the long run, the transition of American labor unionism from a movement dealing directly with employers to one dependent upon governmental action will prove disappointing to its present advocates and disastrous to American laborers everywhere and of every occupational group.

Thoughtful friends of the American labor movement cannot fail to view with apprehension and regret the recent action of the United Mine Workers union leaders, and of its convention, or to hope that the American Federation of Labor will succeed, under the wise leadership of President Green, in the effort to maintain the independence of the labor movement. I am quite certain that a sober and candid survey of the history of the labor movement in this country, as well as in other lands, will bring no other conclusion than this. The way along which Mr. Lewis and his friends would lead the movement today is not a new way, just revealed or discovered, but a very old way strewn with the wreckage of past adventures.

The Post Impressionist

The Shield's Other Side.

Post Office, Thursday.

THE latest contribution to the Eternal Conflict (not using that term in its theological sense, but in its application to the Duel of the Sexes) comes from a man: to wit, the Major. We hasten to print it, as fairness demands—but, as is demanded by fairness, we append an appendix.

* * *

You weren't surprised when we said the Major had sent in something about Woman. You won't be surprised when that something proves to be a something which the feminists may find unpalatable. But if you're a bit like us you'll have surprise to spare when we tell you that the Major's message is from the Sanskrit.

He and Sanskrit don't, at first sound, seem to merge.

* * *

He has been reading Ernest Crawley's study of primitive marriage, "The Mystic Rose." And therefrom the Major extracts a Sanskrit legend.

* * *

According to him, after the Sanskrit deity, Twashtri, had created everything else and turned to the creation of Woman, he found he had "no solid elements left" for the job. So he took:

The creepers' curves, the clinging of tendrils, the trembling of the grass, the leaves' lightness, the sunbeams' gayety, the clouds' tears, the swan's fidelity, the winds' fickleness, the hare's timidity, the peacock's vanity, the hardness of adamant, the tiger's cruelty, the glow of the fire, the snow's cold, the jay's chattering, the crane's hypocrisy.

And out of these elements he made Woman.

And he gave her to Man.

* * *

A week passed and Man returned and complained:

"Lord, this creature that you have given me makes my life miserable. She chatters incessantly, teases me beyond endurance, never leaving me alone. She requires incessant attention, takes all my time, cries about nothing, is always idle. So I have come to give her back again, as I cannot live with her."

* * *

Whereupon Twashtri said: "Very well."

And he took her back.

* * *

"After another week," the legend continues, Man came to him (Twashtri—in Heaven) and said: 'Lord, I find that my life is very lonely since I gave you back that creature. I remember how she used to dance and sing to me, and look at me out of the corner of her eye, and cling to me; and her laughter was music, and she was beautiful to look at and soft to touch. So give her to me again.'"

* * *

Apparently, this request also was granted. For, after a hiatus in the account—and after only three days—Man came once more to Twashtri and pleaded:

"Lord, she is more a trouble than a pleasure to me. So please take her."

Well, this time was one time too many. The Major and Crawley and the Sanskrit original agree that Twashtri said: "Be off with you! I will have no more of this. You must manage how you can."

"But I cannot." Man complained, "live with her!"

To which Twashtri answered: "Neither could you live without her."

* * *

There the Major leaves the story.

* * *

However, the Post-Impressionist, for his part, hasn't the temerity to let it go like that. Although his knowledge of Sanskrit is not what it was a few years ago, he believes he once read another version.

We think it ran thus:

"After Twashtri had fashioned Woman, he took all Euclid's angles, copper's ponderosity, the dog's bark (and the trees'), the jackal's whine (and his bite), the monkey's morals, the tom-cat's fidelity, the inflexibility of a willow-wand, the sheep's rugged individualism—and made Man.

"And gave him to Woman.

"After twenty-four hours had passed, Woman returned to Twashtri and said:

"'Lord, this wretch whom you have given me makes me tired. He brags incessantly and never leaves me alone except when he is never leaving one of the other girls alone. He asks all my attention, rages over nothings, says I can't understand business or politics, cringes before me one minute and, the next, is trying to bully me—Me!—and to pose as my superior—Mine! So I am bringing him back to you, for I simply WON'T live with him.'

"Whereupon Twashtri replied:

"'I quite appreciate your feelings, but I hope you will do me the favor to change your decision and take him back—for here where I am is Heaven, and there is certainly no place for him here.'"

* * *

Yes, now we give our mind to it, we clearly remember reading such a version. We found it graven on a table over at the Smithsonian Institution. And even the handwriting experts on both sides of a murder trial would have agreed that its cuneiform chirography was the work of a feminine hand.

Fair Enough

By Westbrook Pegler

Two-Bottle Statesmen.

London, Feb. 12.

SOME of the Labor members of the British House of Commons have been giving serious consideration to the idea that a statesman wobbling to his feet in a plastered condition, and sounding off on foreign relations like a Saturday night hero in a crowded saloon, may be a greater menace to the welfare of his people than a drunken bus driver.

This is not a new thought in the English Parliament, for it has been customary for some years for some of the members to recognize the risks of overspeaking and to pledge themselves to abstinence during Parliamentary hours.

I do not believe, however, that either the American Senate or House has ever acknowledged the need of a similar precaution, and I pass the idea along merely as a suggestion. It will be timely as long as statesmen wrestle with the giant who lives in the bottle, but never more so than just when all nations are jittering on the brink of war and wearing their honor on their coat sleeves.

• • • •

AMERICANS who lived on this side of the water a few years ago still remember a warlike threat to a foreign nation which was uttered by a Washington statesman once upon a time and printed large in the press of at least three continents.

The author of these remarks was merely a politician on his own home grounds, where all his utterances were subject to a liberal discount, but in foreign lands he was regarded as a public officer of some responsibility, and the press accounts, unfortunately, carry no printer's dingbat, star or other typographical symbol to indicate that the speaker was drunk at the time.

The incident in question caused no serious results and was soon forgotten in the rush of world events, but the temperance movement in the House of Commons plainly takes notice of a well-known reality.

In the present House 73 of the 154 Labor members are total abstainers, and the leaders of the movement are glad to accept part-time recruits who will merely bind themselves to keep strictly sober during the debates.

• • • •

THE sessions usually start late in the afternoon after the statesmen have completed their private business and catch them at a time of the day when a spot of something is just what a man thinks he needs.

They have a species of keyhole and transom journalism in this country, but it is not as daring as the American type and, consequently, nobody ever will know how drunk some of their fine old two-bottle statesmen were when they made some of their most daring orations. Nevertheless, that mahogany complexion which some of the veteran mane-shakers wear is not produced by ice water or lemon squash, and I think it would be admitted confidentially that certain political gladiators do their best or worst when they were, as the saying goes, blind.

Of course, they have a bar in the British Parliament where a member may chin himself like a forgotten umbrella. His drinking will never be a handicap as long as there are quiet little committee rooms disguised as broom closets where a member may squirrel away his quart.

There is a bar in the lobby of the Palace of Peace of the League of Nations also, and it is possible that some of the ingredients of the next war will be poured out of the queer looking bottles on the back shelf, although I must admit that the most ferocious pacifist of them all, Mr. "Pretty Boy" Eden, of Britain, appears to maintain his martial spirit on nothing stronger than oolong and crumpets.

• • • •

IT MAY seem an exaggeration to suggest that any of the eminent world statesmen of the League would pack himself full of Dutch courage at the League of Nations bar and enter the hall to holler some foreign equivalent of "Nuts to the President of France!" but here we have these British representatives frankly admitting a statesman with a hideful has no business doing the public's business and frankly accepting the fact that statesmen sometimes do get overcrowded with drams.

It appears, however, that in the United States only motorists and policemen are strictly required to prove themselves sober upon demand without notice.

The statesman needn't even demonstrate that he is of sound mind, and there are certainly some few in each membership who would have a hard time passing inspection by a board of alienists if they were.

That can't be helped, I suppose, but it should be possible when a member sounds off with a speech which might cause war and the loss of a million lives to make him breathe in a bottle so that the speech when it comes out in print may be honestly rated according to his condition at the time.

French Diplomacy

Correspondent Reports Flandin And Boncour As Well As Eden Can Only Continue Policy Of Their Discredited Predecessors.

By Andre Vulliet.

Special Correspondence of The Post.

Paris.

A CURIOUS development in the future negotiations regarding the Italo-Abyssinian conflict and its possible repercussions in Europe is that the conciliatory policy urged by Pierre Laval, the former French Premier and Foreign Minister, and Sir Samuel Hoare, British Secretary for Foreign Affairs, may have to be followed by their successors. Flandin, French Foreign Minister; Boncour, French State Minister for League of Nations affairs, and Eden, Britain's new Secretary for Foreign Affairs—all of whom were chosen for the respective posts as a reaction against that very policy—may find it difficult to make any substantial swing away from it.

From the look of things in Paris, London and Geneva, it does not seem that the stir created last December by the so-called Hoare-Laval peace proposals, which would have granted Italy a large piece of the Ethiopian cake, is likely to materialize in the immediate future in the form of a strengthening of sanctions against Italy.

Towering Anglophile Flandin, who has succeeded such a born negotiator as Laval at the head of his country's foreign policy, has already declared that he would not materially vary from his predecessor's attitude. Fiery Capt. Eden, who is now responsible for Great Britain's decisions in the foreign field, let it be known that his country would take no initiative in Geneva. Poul Boncour, who once publicly called Mussolini "a Carnival Ceasar," now uses a much softer tone when referring to Il Duce. Since no small nation is likely to start an action on her own account, the chances are that Italy will be left to fight it out with Ethiopia, at least for some time, under the strain of the present sanctions and of her own difficulties at home and on the war front.

A BROAD view of Laval's foreign policy throughout the 14 months during which he held the office of French foreign minister shows that he has more achievements to his credit than is commonly admitted. He was not always put down as a two-faced friend of the League of Nations or as the enemy of collective security. As a matter of fact, until the Italo-Abyssinian affair became nasty, he was regarded as one of the ablest diplomats France had had for years.

He managed to enhance the prestige of the League of Nations and to get the British actively interested in continental affairs when he led his country through the thorny Saar plebiscite in January a year ago. His skillful handling in Geneva of the Hungarian-Yugoslav tension, which had resulted from the assassination of King Alexander of Yugoslavia, in Marseilles, avoided complications and risks of war which, had it not been for the League, might have been very serious.

He came back from his interview with Signor Mussolini in Rome last January with general approval from his country. His trip to Stresa, where France, Great Britain and Italy exchanged their views on the European situation last spring, was a success.

As France's representative he went to London, Rome, Warsaw, Moscow and pretty nearly stopped in Berlin. For months Pierre Laval kept France in a dominant position, improving her relations with Poland and laying the basis of the Franco-Russian pact which is now in debate in the Chamber of Deputies.

• • • •

IT was not until Il Duce was dead set upon his colonial adventure that French public opinion began to be divided as to whether M. Laval was handling the Italo-Abyssinian affair properly.

It may be that wily Laval did not show enough determination in impressing upon his friend Mussolini that he had better not defy the whole world. It is almost certain that, a born negotiator, M. Laval wanted to negotiate at all costs, and maybe too soon.

Despite possible mistakes in psychology and timing, it seems that Laval's attitude in the whole Italo-Abyssinian affair resulted in clearing the international atmosphere of at least a few grave errors. For instance, the violent reaction which followed the Hoare-Laval peace proposals in England, and swept Sir Samuel Hoare out of office, was the clearest indication the French ever had that the British government was not inspired only by selfish interests, but was actually faced with a wave of sincere idealism.

On the other hand, the French effort to slow down sanctions may have given a large body of the British public opinion time to realize that sanctions might strengthen, for a certain period, at least, Il Duce's position among his own people rather than weaken it.

• • • •

AT any rate, a broad view of recent French foreign policy seems to indicate that it has been inspired by the three following principles:

(a) To keep the Italo-Abyssinian war within the limits of an African conflict and avoid any move, however logical, which might endanger European peace.

(b) To preserve the newly-born Franco-Italian friendship which is regarded as an indispensable factor of peace in Central Europe.

(c) To find a solution which, within the framework of the League of Nations, would give Italy some reasonable satisfaction.

Can the foreign policy of the new French cabinet differ substantially from these main points? It does not seem so.

The sudden burst of diplomatic activity which has recently been taking place in Paris may give the impression that great things are in the air and that a new European lineup is in the making.

During the past few days, the new French Foreign Minister, Mr. Flandin, has conferred with the Kings of Rumania and Bulgaria, with the Regent of Yugoslavia, with Prince Von Starhemberg, Vice Chancellor of Austria, and with the foreign ministers of Turkey, Czechoslovakia and Rumania. He has heard the Central European reaction from those who hold front-row seats there.

In reality, this diplomatic activity merely coincided with the formation of the new French cabinet and was made possible by King George's death, which brought all the European statesmen and kings to London. It would probably have taken place, had Mr. Laval still been in office. However, it develops from conversations held in Paris, that Mr. Laval's hesitation to urge League action in the Italo-Abyssinian conflict had caused the small Central European nations, and especially the Little Entente, to wonder whether they could rely on French support in case of a German attack.

• • • •

THE French objective in the present conversations is to reassure them and to accept that measure of League of Nations co-operation and collective assistance which will guarantee the Central European status quo and stave off the "German danger" in Austria.

This has been the mainstay of French diplomatic action in Europe for the past 15 years. There is no reason to believe, that it has varied substantially in the past months.

But, as Wladimir d'Ormesson, a keen political observer and a former diplomat, wrote recently in Le Figaro, the world is still too vast to be cured by one single policy (and that is the weakness of the League of Nations). But Europe has become much too small for us to tear it to pieces. Any wise policy must stand half way between those two propositions.

"Let us do everything we can to keep the Italo-Abyssinian conflict on the relative and secondary plan where it belongs. And let us think of Europe before all . . . For the past six months, we have disregarded Europe. Yet that is where the sore spots are, where the danger lies."

• • • •

IN more than one way skeptic Laval did not believe in the universal ideologies of the League of Nations. He tried to establish degrees in the efficacy of sanctions, feeling, as he did, that the majority of the French people would willingly die to assist Belgium, would be more reticent when it came to stand by Poland, for instance, and would refuse point blank to risk war for the Negus or Manchuria.

In other words, Mr. Laval's idea was to think of Europe first. This is what all the European statesmen now assembled in Paris are doing.

German rearmament and the uneasiness of Central Europe are again coming to the fore in French preoccupations. As a consequence discussions of the long-debated Danubian pact reveal that, owing to the Italian influence in Austria and Hungary, nothing definite will be done in this direction so long as Italy will not be a party to any such pact. And the big problem now confronting the statesmen of Europe is to keep the principle of sanctions and collective security alive, without making Italy another sore spot in Europe.

Masked Marvel

By Karl Schriftgiesser

With the Proletariat

"AND so," the boss ended, "instead of trying to save the masses, or something, why in the devil don't you go out and write about them?" I confess, the idea was startling. Here I had been trying to save the proletariat single-handed from all its foes, real and imaginary, and while pure intellect had dripped from my pen, human nature and the homely virtues had gone walking. So I went out into the cold, determined to shun contact with any of my friends who had ever heard of Karl Marx, and before I knew it I was talking with Lee Yonders.

It came about this way. Walking down E street toward the masses, my hitherto myopic vision lighted upon a sign which announced that the "Masked Marvel" was appearing in that particular poolroom for the rest of the week and everybody was invited. So I climbed up a flight of rather dirty stairs and there, sure enough, was the "Masked Marvel," who turned out to be Mr. Lee Yonders, who turned out to be Mr. Lee Cohen, of East Baltimore.

"Mr. Yonders," I said, "this is the first time I have been in a poolroom in 15 years and I am very proud to meet you, for they tell me that you are the best pool player in Washington."

"How do you do," said Mr. Yonders-Cohen. "Yes, I am the best pool player, as you say; or the best pocket billiards player, as I say. And I am very glad to meet you. Won't you sit down?"

"Yes, sir," said Mr. Yonders-Cohen, "I was a boy wonder at 17 and at 18 I was a right good player. I was taught to play by a very good pocket billiards player," he said, taking off his mask and displaying a dark but smiling countenance that was, however, slightly scarred. He told me later that he had once been known as "Kid Yonders," a promising boxer, but when his mother asked him to fight no more he became a billiards champ instead.

• • • •

FROM his early start in corner pool rooms in east Baltimore, Yonders-Cohen kept right ahead until, at last, he beat Mr. Paul Carroll, champion of all Maryland and the man who taught him how to put the old English on the ball. Now he has reached that stage of his career where he goes from pool room to pool room, with his little black mask and his folding cue, and earns as much as $20 a day, showing the boys on the corner how to knock the balls around. He once dropped 208 balls in the pockets without a miscue.

"My real name is not Yonders," the short, squint-eyed former boxer told me. "It's—Cohen. When I was a youngster in Baltimore I was pretty good and the fellows kept saying, 'Sonny, where do you come from?' whenever I knocked off one of the corner champs. Well, palsy, I come from East Baltimore, so I just said, 'Oh, away down yonder,' and the name stuck. When I became a professional I couldn't very well use the name Cohen, could I? It just didn't seem right."

Anyway, that's the name he goes by now. He is a short little man, now 31 years old, with the brownest eyes you ever saw. He wears a black suit and tie, and gray spats. The boys in the pool room all like him. He goes all over the country earning his living playing pocket billiards. He thinks the game is coming back now, and he says there isn't a pool room in town which doesn't boast one or two exceptionally fine players.

• • •

MR. YONDERS-COHEN never gambles except when some wise guy taunts him. Then he takes him up for, say, $5 just so he can take the smart one's money from him and teach him a lesson.

"I don't like gambling," he said. "Gambling breeds contempt for the game you should play for fun."

His mother was against his playing when he was a lad. But he played just the same, although she used to get very angry. His playing got to be the talk of the neighborhood and it got to his mother's ears, and she used to box his, and lock him up. But you can't deter genius that way. He doesn't resent having played against his mother's wishes, he said:

"Every time I do gamble I feel terrible, thinking about her. I feel I'm just not doing right."

Mr. Yonders-Cohen says crowds in pool rooms are more sensible than they were. There's less rough stuff. The fellows who run them, toss out the bums quicker than they did. Mr. Yonders-Cohen doesn't like bums. He doesn't smoke—except an occasional cigar. He doesn't drink—except some beer now and then. He said all you needed to be a pool player is a keen eye, perfect concentration, and a good temper. Given that, you could do a lot more than play pool, too, but he didn't think of that.

There's one reason why he doesn't like being an exhibition pool player. Every time he meets a nice girl and thinks he might marry her, her mother finds out he's a pool player and busts the romance right up. But except for that he thinks pool playing is swell. He can make a living at it, which a lot of the guys who come in to watch him just because it's warm in the pool room can't do. And that's something, these days.

Excerpts From Lincoln Day Address by Hoover

By the Associated Press.

Portland, Oreg., Feb. 12.—Following are excerpts from the address of former President Herbert Hoover here tonight:

Since the great war liberty has fallen in a score of nations. In America, where it blazed brightest and by its glow shed light to all others, it is today impaired and endangered.

Again we are • • • testing whether that nation or any nation so conceived and so dedicated can long endure."

• • • •

• • • •

The President stated a month ago that the issue before us is "the right of the average man and woman to lead a finer, better and happier life."

That is an objective to which we all agree • • • That is not at issue. The issue is the New Deal methods and objectives, which are destroying this very thing.

The issue is the attempt to fasten upon the American people some sort of a system of personal government or a government of laws; a system of centralization under a political bureaucracy; a system of debt; a system of inflation; a system which would stifle the freedom and liberty of men.

• • • •

The outstanding state of this Union at this hour is a state of confusion. Confusion in thought, confusion in government, confusion in economic life, and confusion in ideals. Few national problems have been really solved.

• • • •

The President in his message on the state of the Union seems to fear that fear is prevalent in the Union • • •

The New Deal has been a veritable fountain of fear. The day after the New Deal was given life at the election of 1932 began the great fear which created the bank panic of March 4. The stock boom today is not from confidence in the future; it is partly from fear of inflation • • • It was the Supreme Court decision crashing through New Deal tyrannies which brough a gleam of confidence from the fears that had retarded recovery.

• • • •

The President in reporting on the State of the Union also found it alive with "money-changers," "seekers for selfish power," "dishonest speculators," "economic autocrats," and "entrenched greed."

That • • • has merit as a call to class war, a red herring across the trail of failure, an implication that all opponents are defenders of evil, a claim that righteousness now has refuge alone in Washington, and an avoidance of facts and figures • • • It does not heal the wounds of the Nation • • •

But it happens that after three years of the New Deal the same men direct business today that were there three years ago. But what has become of the new laws designed to reform the wicked? We have seen no indictments except political oratory. That is confusing.

• • • •

The human animal has many primitive instincts that morals, religion, and the law have not been able wholly to eradicate. He has two forms of greed—the greed for money and the greed for power. The lust for power is infinitely the worse. The greed for money can be curbed by law, but the greed for power seizes the law itself for its ends • • •

• • • •

The President states "• • • In 34 months we have built up new instruments of public power. In the hands of the people's government this power is wholesome and proper." The President concedes that in other hands it would "provide shackles for the liberties of the people." That is confusion of dictatorship with democracy. The very origin of this republic was in order that nobody should possess such power over the people.

These instruments of power march to the "finer, better, and happier life" under a banner of strange device—"planned economy." By this time you know this glittering phrase does not mean economy in Government spending. It has proved to mean politically dictated economic life.

• • • •

I need recall only those two builders of confusion, the NRA and the AAA. These two towers of Babel which the children of men built were also to reach to heaven. The headlines tell us of the character of the bricks and the mortar. Must legislation. No debate. Personal government by proclamation. Ballyhoo. Codes. Factory production restricted. Competition limited. Monopolies created. Government price fixing. Increasing costs. Increased prices. Decreased consumption. Increased cost of living. Strikes. Lockouts. Boycott. Coercion. Crack down. Jail. Small business men washed out. Crops plowed under. Animals slaughtered. Housewife strikes. Consumption of food decreases. Nation imports foods. Farmers' market given to foreigners. Economy of scarcity. Nation gets richer by producing less at higher costs.

Their language was confounded and they were scattered by the Supreme Court.

But a new confusion arises. • • • The President says: "I recommend to Congress that we advance, that we do not retreat." My impression is that Napoleon used somewhat that expression when he was marching to Moscow.

The American people have a right to have this clarified. Has the President abandoned these theories or not?

• • • •

The third battalion of confusion has been the spending budget deficits, debts, currency and credit. Within a month since the President's budget message it has become more confused by $4,000,000,000 or $5,000,000,000 more expenditures. • • •

I note in the budget message President Roosevelt said, "The finances of the Government are in better condition than at any time in the past seven years." You may remember the uneasiness of the decimal point which I mentioned some months ago. It has moved steadily to the left.

• • • •

Soon after assuming office three years ago President Roosevelt commented upon my partial failure to persuade a Democratic Congress to balance the budget. He said sternly: "Too often in recent history liberal governments have been wrecked on the rocks of loose fiscal policies. We must avoid this danger."

Those rocks are now looming up out of this fog. The Nation has been steered into the dangerous channels of borrowing these vast deficits from the banks, by a huge cycle of bank credit inflation. That is printing-press credit. The charts of all history show this channel leads to currency inflation. Every democracy which entered these straits has been sunk. • • • Today the budget is the worst unbalanced in history; the currency has its foundation in the will of one man. • • •

• • • •

These currency and credit policies have driven men all over the Nation into a scramble of buying equities to protect themselves. These policies have made a paradise for the speculator. He lives by shrewd anticipation in a land of confusion. Millions have been made in the stock market.

Millions have been made by foreign speculators in silver. At the same time millions of Americans are tramping the streets looking for work. Speculation drains employment; it does not make it. Having opened the channels of greed, rightly the President may be worried over the greedy.

But worse than all that, out of these devaluation and inflation policies the cost of living inevitably and inexorably rises. The average man and his housewife will find these policies in every package they buy. • • •

The American people have a right to know and to know now what steps the President proposes to clean up this budget and money confusion. Unless this confusion can be quickly dissolved it will lead to one of the great tradedies of all humanity—inflation.

• • • •

The fourth battalion of confusion is the administration of relief. Under that guise great sociological experiments have been undertaken. The Government has gone into private business on a huge scale. These enterprises have created a million confusions and fears • • •

• • • •

For fifty years it has been an aspiration of America that our government officials should be removed from the political spoils system. The selection by merit through the Civil Service Commission was not alone to gain efficiency in government. Its purpose was to raise the morals of public life. • • •

The Coolidge officials under the civil service were about 75 per cent. The Hoover increase was to over 81 per cent. The Roosevelt decrease has been to 57 per cent. This is exhibit A of the New Deal idealism. • • •

During the Hoover administration, despite the many emergency agencies needed to meet the depression, the total number of Federal officials was decreased by 10,000. But under the New Deal, part or full-time political officials have been increased by over 335,000. In his Jackson Day speech the President urged committees of one to support the New Deal in the campaign. He has a good start with 335,000 committees—and their wives.

But the average man who does not get his feet into the trough has to carry these officials on his back.

We have started upon the road of business recovery. That began instantly upon the restoration of some degree of confidence by the Supreme Court. But it is a confused recovery. We have still 20,000,000 people on relief after three years.

• • • •

Moreover, real and permanent recovery will not take place so long as every business man must make a blind bet on these confusions in Washington.

A balanced budget and a stable currency would put more men to work than the whole WPA. They need confidence, not confusion.

These gigantic plans of dictated economy were undertaken without searching inquiry as to fact or experience. They were undertaken without even shaping on the anvil of debate. They were undertaken in disregard of the Constitution. They have been without adequate administrative checks and balances. They have been administered by political appointees of inadequate executive experience. Despite this horde of officials there is now disintegration and confusion in the halls of Government.

• • • •

President Roosevelt • • • has at times recalled Jefferson, Jackson, Lincoln and Theodore Roosevelt to justify this state of the Union. I have not noticed any call upon the shade of Grover Cleveland.

To clear up some confusion as to their views I may also summon the shades of these favorite Presidents upon the same subjects.

First, Thomas Jefferson, who said, "were we directed from Washington when to sow and when to reap we should soon want bread." Apparently this was forgotten when they created the AAA.

Jefferson also said, "• • • The principle of spending money to be paid by posterity, under the name of funding, is but swindling futurity on a large scale." That would seem even truer to the children of this generation.

President Jackson said "all history tells us that a free people should be watchful of delegated power." He did not know what it was to watch perpetual motion in delegated powers.

Jackson also believed in "to the victors belong the spoils." He was contented by appointing 2,000 of his followers to office. After all, he had a moderate spirit.

Theodore Roosevelt said, "If a change in currency were so enacted as to amount to dishonesty, that is repudiation of debts, it would be very bad morally."

This quotation was not sent to Congress with New Deal currency bills.

• • • •

And may I add one quotation from Daniel Webster, who says: "He who tampers with the currency robs labor of its bread. He panders indeed to greedy capital, which is keen-sighted and may shift for itself, but he beggars labor, which is unsuspecting and too busy with the present to calculate the future. The prosperity of the working people lives, moves and has its being in established credit and steady medium of payment."

The President quotes Josiah Royce. Perhaps he overlooked this remark from that philosopher: "The present tendency to the centralization of power in our National Government seems to me, then, a distinct danger. It is a substitution of power for loyalty."

• • • •

Ten of the assaults upon liberty have already cracked against the Constitution of the United States. And has there been public outcry at their loss? There has been a lift to the soul of the Nation. Millions of average men and women have given thinks to the Almighty that the forethought of great Americans has saved for them freedom itself.

But the court cannot deal with all the assaults upon the spirit of American liberty. It was the spirit of liberty which made our American civilization. That spirit made the Constitution. If that spirit is gone, even though its words remain. The undermining of local government by centralization at Washington, the spoils system, the reduction of Congress to a rubber stamp, these monetary policies—what of these?

The President implies he will not retreat, despite the decisions of the court. We have heard mutterings that the Constitution must be changed, that it is outmoded, that it was useful only in the horse and buggy days. There was sinister invitation to Congress to "find means to protect its own prerogative."

• • • •

A great American once said in application to another crisis: "We have, as all will agree, a free government, where every man has the right to be equal with every other man. In this great struggle, this form of government and every form of human right is endangered if our enemies succeed. There is more involved in this contest than is realized by everyone. There is involved in this struggle the question whether your children and my children shall enjoy the privileges we have enjoyed." That was Abraham Lincoln.

Hoover Scores New Deal

jective to which we all agree. • • • That is not at issue. The issue is the New Deal methods and objectives which are destroying this very thing."

The current stock market "boom" he attributed partly to fear of inflation prospects, rather than confidence in the future. He sarcastically attacked Administration activities by commenting on quotations of Thomas Jefferson, Andrew Jackson, Daniel Webster and Theodore Roosevelt used in Presidential addresses.

Further, the broadside of accusations against his successor included:

1. The "explosive" forces of inflation are already being generated, resulting, for one thing, in higher living costs.

2. The New Deal seeks to persuade votes for it from relief recipients.

3. An unbalanced budget and unstable currency are retarding recovery.

4. The budget at present is the "worst balanced in history."

5. The confusion characterizing other activities is not present in New Deal politics.

"A Fountain of Fear."

"The President • • • says 'the only thing we have to fear is fear,'" Hoover said. "Just so.

"The New Deal has been a veritable fountain of fear. The day after the New Deal was given life • • • began the Great Fear which created the bank panic of March 4 (1933). The stock boom today is not from confidence in the future; it is partly from fear of inflation."

Unemployment of millions in the capital goods industries, he said, is due to fear of New Deal currency policies.

Charges of "confusion" were leveled at Administration fiscal and relief policies in a new tack of Hoover's criticism upon these New Deal items.

"Within a month since the President's budget message," he declared, "it has become more confused by 4,000,000,000 or 5,000,000,000 more expenditures."

"The national debt now bids fair to rise to a minimum of $35,000,000,000," Hoover said, in asserting the increase of $1,250,000,000 during his Administration is only "about 10 per cent of what New Deal mechanics will accomplish."

"But in 1926, there were no unemployed; today there are 10,000,000 unemployed."

Likens Present to 1926.

He said that in 1926 foreign trade was flourishing, while today it is "demoralized;" that in 1926, the budget was balanced, the currency stable.

"These currency and credit politics," Hoover asserted, "have driven men all over the Nation into a scramble of buying equities to protect themselves • • •.

"Millions have been made in the stock market. • • • At the same time, millions of Americans are tramping the streets looking for work."

He asserted the cost of living has soared from Administration devaluation and inflation policies.

He referred to a statement by Mr. Roosevelt that "the money-changers have fled from • • • the temple of our civilization."

"It would appear," said Hoover, "that after three years of the New Deal they have all come back again with helpers."

Don't Mention It.

Deering Will Bequeaths 7 Million to University

Evanston, Ill., Feb. 12 (U.P.).—A $7,000,000 gift to Northwestern University from the estate of Roger Deering, heir to the Deering farm and machine fortune, who died February 2 at Phoenix, Ariz., was announced tonight by President Walter Dill Scott.

The gift was the largest single bequest made to an institution of higher learning since 1932, when the late George Eastman, Kodak magnate, left $14,000,000 to the University of Rochester.

The bequest was made in Deering's will now under probate in Miami, Fla. Under its terms, the university was named as residuary legatee after payment of bequests totaling $400,000.

San Diego Exposition Reopened to Thousands

San Diego, Calif., Feb. 12 (AP).—The California Pacific International Exposition—nudist colony and all—reopened today at Balboa Park to thousands of visitors.

The weather favored the nudists—and thereby went one up on the show's officials, who have adopted a policy of "wait and see" before acting further on protests against the colony. For the visitors it was see without waiting as pretty girls of the colony, encouraged by the sunshine, raced across the lawn of their inclosure.

Advance sale of season tickets totaled 1,090,000.

The Once Over

By H. I. Phillips

Is the Emergency Over?

President Roosevelt now faces the emergency of declaring whether or not the emergency is over. The question of the hour is not whether Uncle Sam, snatched from the breakers four years ago, has been rolled on a barrel long enough, but whether it's good politics to admit it.

• • • •

There are increasing indications that the President thinks it is time to end government by pulmotor, and publicly declare that the country may now safely abandon the slogan, "An Aladdin's Lamp in Every Home!"

• • • •

Mr. Roosevelt found Uncle Sam over his head with the cramps and no lifebelt. He threw him a life line. And followed it up by throwing him everything except the tattooed lady on the life guard's arm.

• • • •

He saved the old boy by drastic measures, but the New Deal seemed to forbid swimming instruction on the ground that the Government would do every man's bathing for him.

• • • •

Every time Sam would show some signs of mastering the Australian crawl somebody would hit him with an oar, haul him out of the pool, and toss him back into the emergency tent with a stern warning that swimming was a Federal operation.

• • • •

But, right or wrong, the Democratic solicitude worked and the patient is now so far recovered that the President would probably discharge him at once were it not for the fact that it would mean firing so many nurses and scrapping all those thermometers, pink pills, and fever charts.

• • • •

Uncle Sam has been surrounded by so many solicitous nurses for so many years that, if the politicians are right, he is apt to feel neglected now if he should wake up suddenly and find only one nurse holding hands with him at a time.

• • • •

The President is caught between two schools of thought. One would have him announce over a national network that the emergency is over, and take the credit, customary bows and resultant fan mail. The other thinks a sudden termination of Government tenderness would be more than the voters could stand.

• • • •

When somebody's been bringing your eggs to you in bed every morning for years it's a terrible shock to be notified that you'll have to go to the kitchen for your own groceries.

• • • •

Maybe the more abundant life is here. But will the voters like it if they have to endure the sudden exertion of reaching for it?

Mrs. Homer Cummings Entertains Group at Ruthven.

By Dudley Harmon.

The more venturesome members of Capital society slipped and slid up a snow-covered driveway yesterday to Mrs. Homer Cummings' last "at home" of the season. Mrs. Cummings' estate, Ruthven, is perched on one of the highest hills overlooking Rock Creek Park. Yesterday numerous cars got stuck in the still-snowy drive. While struggling chauffeurs shoved and pushed, discouraged occupants clambered out and proceeded the rest of the way on foot.

Several reception guests, after having made their farewells all around, found that their cars were snowbound somewhere on the hill. So they returned to the tea table and started all over again until rescued.

Mrs. Cummings in Black.

Mrs. Cummings, dressed in an ankle-length gown of black crepe with inserts of white lace on the shoulders, greeted the guests in the long living room at Ruthven. After warming themselves by a fire which blazed away on the hearth, the company wandered into the dining room, where a long table was set with sandwiches and cakes.

When we arrived, after leaving our taxi driver to his fate in a ditch half way up the hill, Mrs. Lawrence Wood Robert was serving tea at one end of the table. She wore a black dress, a black hat with a veil and a double silver fox scarf. Pouring coffee at the other end of the table was Mrs. W. Forbes Morgan, whose dog Hamlet was recently declared innocent of charges of assault preferred against him by neighbors. Mrs. Morgan, who wore a navy blue dress with white polka dots, was swapping dog anecdotes with the Misses Mary and Josephine Patton, who have also been through some difficult times with dogs.

Several Assist Hostess.

Mrs. Cummings had assisting her Mme. Peter, wife of the Minister of Switzerland; Mme. Sokolowska, wife of the Charge d'Affaires of Poland; Mrs. Joseph Byrns, wife of the Speaker of the House; Mrs. Arthur H. Vandenberg, Miss Marguerite LeHand, Mrs. Bruce Kremer, who wore a long gown of green crepe, and Mrs. William Stanley, wife of the Assistant to the Attorney General.

Mrs. Harlan Fiske Stone, in a brown coat, mink trimmed, came with Mrs. Owen Roberts. Others there were Mrs. Stanley Reed, in a rose-colored tweed coat trimmed with beaver; Mrs. Marvin McIntyre, Mrs. Alva Adams, wife of the Senator from Clorado, with her daughter, Miss Elizabeth Adams; Mrs. Morris Sheppard, wife of the Senator from Texas; Mrs. Louis Owsley, Mrs. James Clement Dunn, with her daughter, Mis Marianna Dunn, both of whom recently returned from Europe; Mrs. J. Leroy Adair, Mrs. Clarence Lea, wife of the Representative from California; Mrs. Marcus Coolidge, Mrs. Ernest Van Fossan, Mrs. Harold Brown, Mr. and Mrs. Richardson Saunders, Mr. and Mrs. Emil Hurja, Mrs. Edwin Watson, Mrs. Bryan Battey, wife of the Assistant Commissioner of Patents; Mrs. Robert Love Taylor and Mr. and Mrs. Paul Maloney.

Mrs. Claude Swanson, Mrs. James A. Farley Are Hostesses.

By Francesca McKenney.

Mrs. Swanson, wife of the Secretary of the Navy, received yesterday afternoon for the last time this season in her home on R street. United States sailors were at the door and were on the landings of the staircase leading to the drawing room on the second floor, where Mrs. Swanson received her guests with Mrs. Henry Latrobe Roosevelt, wife of the Assistant Secretary of the Navy, and Mrs. Adolphus Andrews, wife of Rear Admiral Andrews. Mrs. Swanson wore a gown of deep wine-colored crepe made on long lines and a crushed belt marking the waistline with an old-gold buckle and a shoulder corsage of gardenias. Mrs. Roosevelt wore an afternoon gown of pale gray with a hat to match and two handsome silver foxes. Mrs. Andrews wore an afternoon gown of black satin with insertions of cream colored chiffon in the bodice, and a black hat.

The drawing room and dining room were attractively decorated with early spring flowers massed in vases on the tables and buffets. The table in the dining room where tea and coffee were served was laden with sandwiches, cakes and candies.

Alternate at Tea Table.

Alternating at the tea table were Mrs. George Sutherland, Mrs. Harlan Fiske Stone, Mrs. Owen J. Roberts, Mme. Saito, wife of the Ambassador of Japan; Mme. Peter, wife of the Minister of Switzerland; Mme. Pelenyi, wife of the Minister of Hungary; Mme. van Haersma de With, wife of the Minister of the Netherlands; Mrs. William R. Castle, jr., wife of the former Undersecretary of State; Lady Lister-Kaye, and Mrs. Paul Bastedo.

Generally assisting Mrs. Swanson was Mrs. Louis McCarty Little, Mrs. John H. Russell, who looked very smart in all black; Mrs. Emory S. Land, Mrs. Harold Stark, Mrs. B. F. Hutchison, Mrs. Alfred Johnson, who wore an afternoon gown of black crepe trimmed with gold paillettes; Mrs. Henry P. WAS IT MURDER?

By James Hilton

Colin Revell, young writer, temporary secretary to Robert Roseveare, headmaster at Oakington School, is interested in the mysterious deaths of the Marshall brothers, pupils at the school. He and Guthrie, Scotland Yard detective, suspect that the boys were killed by Ellington, one of the masters, cousin of the boys and heir to their fortune. But when Lambourne, another master at the school, is found dead, Rosamund, Ellington's wife, tells Revell and Guthrie that Lambourne confessed to her that he killed the boys to cast suspicion on her husband, whom he hated. They decide that Lambourne killed himself to escape a murder charge, but caution her not to tell of this confession, and the world thinks the school-master died of an accidental overdose of veronal. Revell becomes infatuated with Rosamund, but she puts him off. He writes to Guthrie asking him the whereabouts of Wilbraham Marshall's bathrobe, found beside his dead body in the empty swimming pool. One night he sees a revolver cocked at him through his window and tries to find his assailant.

CHAPTER XXVIII.

HE NEVER knew exactly what happened just after that. The next he clearly remembered was being in his own room, on his own easy chair, with Guthrie offering him brandy out of a flask. Yes, Guthrie.

"Feeling better, eh?" the detective said, in a kindly voice.

Memory came back to him with a rush. "Yes—oh, yes, I'm all right—but up there—in the sick rooms—there's someone hiding——"

"Don't get excited—I know all about it. I turned the key in the lock at the bottom of the stair as we came down."

Turned the key in the lock! Why on earth hadn't he himself thought of something so absurdly simple? He stammered, "But—but—aren't you going to—to arrest him?"

"All in good time—no need for you to worry. A little bit of a wait will do our friend up there no harm. First of all, as soon as you feel ready for it, I'd like to know just a few details of this latest development."

Revell was still dazed; he stared at Guthrie in vague astonishment. "I don't understand why you are here—I don't—I don't think—I understand—anything."

"No?" Guthrie's voice was quietly sympathetic. "All right, then, it doesn't matter. You've had a pretty fair shock—I'm not surprised it's taken a bit of the wind out of you. But you were chasing somebody, weren't you?"

Revell jerked out: "Somebody tried to shoot me—through the window—I ran after him—and he went up to the sick rooms."

"You saw him try to shoot you?"

"I saw the revolver and I knew who he was." After which, in slow staccato phrases he recounted the whole incident.

For the next few moments Guthrie behaved like an altogether different man. Usually calm and imperturbable in manner, he became suddenly agile and excited; he sprang to the window, opened it wide, and gave the sill and framework a most minute examination. When he turned 'round again his lips were tight with anger. "A pretty trick, Revell," he said, bitterly. "Well worthy of the others. Come and look here." And as Revell staggered to his feet and approached the window the detective took his arm with a sudden friendliness that was again unusual. "I'm damned glad you're still alive, anyhow. It's only by amazing luck that you are. The difficulty, you see, was to shoot without being seen—to take aim, that is, without the criminal having to put a head round the corner. You were typing, you say, just before you noticed the revolver pointing at you?"

"Yes."

"You've often been in the same position before, I suppose?"

Discovers Plot.

"I see." He led Revell close to the window. "Notice these two nails on the inside of the window embrasure. It was a devilish neat idea. For if you place the barrel of a revolver plumb against the brickwork and at the same time lying across these two nails, it will aim directly at the head of anyone sitting as you were at the desk here. The assassin had only to lean out of the end dormitory window next door, hold the revolver in position, and shoot as soon as the sound of your typewriter began. Simple, but rather desperate when you come to ponder over it. Our friend must have rather badly wanted you out of the way."

"It was jealousy," Revell answered. "His wife told me he was like that. And he saw her here with me a little while ago."

"Oh?" Guthrie raised his eyebrows slightly. Then he wandered about the room with apparent casualness, picking up first one thing and then another. At last the writing desk and its contents attracted his attention.

"Hullo, what's this—a letter for me? I suppose I may open it." Revell watched him half-dreamily, still too bewildered to attempt any interference. He saw the detective read the letter, slip it into its envelope and put it into his pocket without remark.

"I still don't quite understand why you are here," Revell said at length.

Guthrie Finds Revolver.

"No? Ah, well, never mind—all in good time, as I said before. You can thank your lucky star I was here, anyhow. Have a smoke—it'll calm your nerves." He lit his own pipe and puffed vigorously. "The Oakington murderer is, of course, upstairs. I daresay you guessed as much. There's no chance of escape—the windows are too far from the ground and barred as well. And here, by the way, is the revolver that nearly did for you. I found it on the stairs on the way up. The murderer must have been in a deuce of a hurry to drop it." He produced from his hip pocket a villainous-looking long-barreled weapon. "This is what is called a Colt point 22 police positive. Not a nice thing to be plugged with, by any means. Yes, my lad, you've been damned lucky." He turned to the book shelves at his elbow, abstracted an A.B.C. guide and began languorously to search the pages. "Ah, there's a train to town in half an hour from now—the night mail from Easthampton. I should catch it if I were you."

Revell faced this new suggestion with fresh bewilderment. "But—but why?"

"Oh, well, you've had enough fun for one night, surely. Leave me the job of putting the bracelets on our friend. You'll be able to read all about it in the papers tomorrow."

A Surprise In Attic.

Revell suddenly realized the drift of the other's remarks. "Mr. Guthrie," he answered, with flushing cheeks, "you needn't think you can take me in as easily as that! I can see what you're after. You've bungled this case pretty badly up to now, yet you want to come in for all the credit just as if you hadn't. I tracked down the Oakington murderer, not you, and though I don't mind you coming in with me on it, I'm damn well going to see that you don't shove me out! After sweating over the business long after you'd given it up as a bad job, don't you think I deserve to be in at the finish?"

Guthrie nodded quite equably. "All right, if that's how you look at it." He shrugged his broad shoulders; Revell was rather surprised that he should give in so easily. "Well, if we are going to do the job together, we'd better get it done, that's all. Do you feel equal to any possible unpleasantness?"

"Of course," answered Revell, valiantly. "We should be armed, anyhow."

"Oh, I wasn't so much thinking of that. Still, you can carry this affair with you, if you like. It isn't loaded now, so you can wave it about if you feel inclined. Anyhow, let's go."

He led the way out into the corridor, and a moment later, after unlocking the door at the foot, they were climbing the stairs to the floor above, but this time with Guthrie's powerful electric torch illuminating the way. Revell's heart was beginning to beat fast again, but Guthrie appeared quite calm. "This was where we first met, wasn't it?" he whispered, as they reached the top. "Romantic spot, eh?" He turned to the right, with Revell following him.

There were five rooms in a row, each with the door closed. Guthrie opened the first, flashed his torch 'round, and closed the door again. "Nothing there," he said.

The next three rooms were similarly searched; since they were completely bare of furniture it did not take more than a rapid flash of the torch into all the corners. They knew then, of course, as they had perhaps expected from the beginning, that their guest would end at the fifth room. As Guthrie opened the door of it a strange sound came from within—a sound as of a dry, coughing sob. And a second later the rays of the torch lit up, in the furthest corner, the small, huddled figure of Mrs. Ellington.

New Treatment For Blackheads Recommended

By Ruth Anne Davis.

BEAUTY news that's good news has to do with a remarkable blackhead and pore treatment. A treatment, incidentally that's simple, sound, and safe.

If you have blackheads you inevitably have large pores. Or rather, it's the other way around. You begin with the enlarged pore, caused by overactive oil glands. The pore is receptive to dirt, which in time solidifies and forms blackheads. These, if not properly cleansed from the skin, often cause infection, some the skin, often cause infection sometimes developing into blemishes which may result in an acne condition. Now these large pores cannot be contracted from the surface alone. They must be cleansed and then shrunk at the base.

The new treatment proceeds in this wise. First, with an open pore and blackhead wash. It's a gritty substance applied simply by taking a small amount in the palm of the hand, thinning it into a paste with a few drops of tepid water, then working it into the oily or blackhead area with fingertips in a rotary motion until this affected area is cleansed of all congestion and dead cuticle. It checks excessive oiliness, dissolves the inactive secretions of the glands that clog the pores, softens the skin and assists in eliminating the hard, white congestion under the skin, known as whiteheads or milia.

Next step is shrinking the pores with a preparation known as pore reducer. It is a concentrated astringent that thoroughly stimulates the blood circulation. It refines the skin and by this means refines the pores to invisibility. You apply a bit with absorbent cotton and press gently into enlarged pores at night Results, it is claimed, are immediate and lasting.

Spring Neckwear.

WE KNOW that spring is on the way. We've seen the signs and so may you. You've only to visit the neckwear department of a local store to see such a profusion of flowers that you'll think spring is here!

Such flowers. They are made of pique and other fabrics and come in all colors under the sun. They're just right for giving bright touches to dark suits, a dash of femininity here and there.

You might be surprised to see a hint of fall in the midst of all this blossomry. Yes, sir, there are bunches of oak leaves in brilliant autumn colors—wine, rust, pink and red. There are some in white, too.

Bon Voyage Gift.

A BON VOYAGE gift to live up to ideal requirements should be, first, small and second, surprising. One that is both of these and useful besides is the imported soap that comes in a neat little oilskin bag which fastens at the top with a draw string. Both soap and bag are available in a variety of fresh spring colors.

FAVORITE FOODS of famous folk

By Pattie Ellicott.

IN THE HOSPITABLE American Legation in Copenhagen, Denmark, the United States Minister to that capital, Ruth Bryan Owen, has introduced many native dishes from America to the Danish people at her teas and dinners.

MRS. OWEN.

Minister Owen has not been content, however, merely to acquaint the Danes with the culinary tidbits of the country she represents in that historic land. She has made a study of and tried out many Danish recipes and is enthusiastic about many famous dishes of Denmark, particularly the far-famed Danish pastry.

Mrs. Owen also is fond of the native apple cake, which is a favorite with the people, high and low, and is always offered to guests at any Danish home.

Apple Cake.

½ cup butter
1½ cups sugar
¾ cup milk (scant)
1½ cups flour
1 egg
1½ teaspoons baking powder
½ teaspoon vanilla
3 apples
Cinnamon and powdered sugar

Cream together 1-3 cupful of butter and 1 scant cupful of sugar until light. Add beaten egg yolk, and when well mixed, add flour (into which the baking powder has been sifted) and milk alternately. Beat thoroughly, add vanilla, fold in the beaten white of egg and pour the mixture into a well greased square baking tin. Peel and slice the apples and lay them in overlapping rows on top of the cake until the whole surface is covered, sprinkle with the remaining sugar, dot with remaining butter, and bake in moderate oven 40 minutes. When done, remove from pan and place, dust generously with powdered sugar and cinnamon and serve with apple-side up, on a warm platter; hard sauce or plain rich cream.

Sees Feminine Hand Again at Harp

MISS MILDRED DILLING.

Harp Comes Back to Popularity From Dim Obscruity of Past

HARP PLAYING HAD a lot to do with a lady's popularity in the 60's and 70's. Later the feminine harpist gave away to the organist, and was in turn replaced by the pianist.

But now, the harp is coming back into its own. The woman who keeps her ear to the musical ground these days is hearing as much response to the plucking of the strings as to the playing of the piano keys.

So thinks Mildred Dilling, internationally famous harpist, who recently played at the White House. Miss Dilling played her favorite musical instrument through its lean years and now stands at the top of her profession as the harp comes back into prominence.

Her career was her mother's idea rather than her own, she admitted. "A good many years ago when my mother was a child, she heard two strolling musicians give a program. One played a small harp; the other, the violin. She was entranced with their performance, and made up her mind then and there if she ever had any children, at least two would be musicians. One would play the harp; the other, the violin," she said.

Young Concert Artist.

So on her twelfth birthday Mildred Dilling was given a harp. "At that time I was reading the Little Colonel Stories, and was particularly impressed that the heroine whose hair was blonde like mine, played the harp," she explained. "That fired my ambitions."

Within a year she was playing in concerts throughout her home State, Indiana, for audiences that included such men as James Whitcomb Riley, Booth Tarkington and Meredith Nicholson. Encouragement she received then paved the way for future triumphs.

While her work has been mostly in the concert field, she has also taught others to play the harp. One of her most widely known pupils is Harpo Marx, whom she has instructed for more than seven years. The noted harpist-comedian had taken one lesson before he asked her to teach him. "Since then he has studied with me, with some of my pupils in California and with my teacher, Henriette Renié, when he happened to be in Paris.

Harpo Serious Student.

She spoke of Harpo as "a highly talented, serious student who plays by ear and rote rather than by reading music," and emphasized "he is totally absorbed in the harp when he is playing it."

Although she has seen him in his most serious moods, she says she enjoys him very much in his comic roles. She told of a performance in New York when he played a number. "When he left the stage there was much applause. It continued; grew louder. Still he did not return for an encore, nor to take a bow. Finally the audience realized he was not coming back. Later I asked him why he had not responded to the tremendous applauser. 'I couldn't,' he replied, 'I was out in the front helping to keep it up.'"

Complete Instrument.

Discussing the harp's return to popularity, Miss Dilling pointed out that "in a mechanical age, an unmechanical instrument provides a pleasing and restful contrast. Since it is the only complete instrument besides the piano, and there are so many good pianists today, more and more musicians are turning to the harp. Some day it may be as important as it once was in Wales, when every gentleman knew how 'to build a boat and sail it; make a harp and play it; compose an ode and set it to music.'"

The increasing popularity of the harp today is attested by the fact that it attracts so much favorable attention on the radio, according to Miss Dilling, who was the first solo harpist to broadcast in Ireland, land of the harp; the first American artist to be sent by the British Broadcasting Co. on a tour through the British Isles, and the first harpist to appear in a regular program over a network in this country.

Pleasant HOMES

By Elizabeth MacRae Boykin.

"I'VE NO HEAD for figures," said a vivacious lady who is grand at golf and gardening. "So I need some help at spending some money."

Most of us don't need help in spending money so much as we need help in getting it! However we know how easy it is to get involved with one lovely something and spend our whole budget on it with nothing left over for other more or less essentials. This particular lady has $450 to spend refreshing her living room and dining room.

Her living room is 12x20 with a stairway and wide arch into the dining room. The walls are beige and the furniture is all walnut. She has one lamp in white and two in gold. She wants to recover a three-piece overstuffed set, get new draperies, and have new floor covering. What material, she asks, would we advise for the furniture? And would we recommend broadloom carpeting all the way to the wall, or should a border of floor be left all around? And should the same floor covering be used in the dining room?

If the house is rented, we wouldn't have the carpet to the wall as it would entail waste in moving it, but if the house belongs to the family then we'd like the carpet all the way to the wall. And we'd prefer the adjoining dining room to have the same floor covering. Rust carpeting with a jade sofa sounds lovely.

Body Requires Correct Lime Distribution

By Dr. Irving S. Cutter.

WHEN we erect a building the first necessity is a good foundation. It may be laid in rock or in good hard earth. At any rate it must rest on solid material, so that settling will not occur.

We may liken the foundation of a building to the skeleton of the body, in which calcium derived from food is used to form the bony structure To the bones the muscles are attached, and these in turn support the blood vessels and the nerves. Were it not for calcium the human body would be a formless, jelly-like mass. Muscles could not function because they would have no leverage. Anchored to one another, their contractions would pull and twist the mass of flesh into hideous shapes. We recognize, therefore, our dependence upon lime for the beautiful contour of the human body.

Controlled by Glands.

But we have learned that lime must be disseminated throughout the human frame in proper proportions, and in good health this is controlled by certain glandular structures, particularly the parathyroids that lie in the neck.

We know also that the circulation is a great distributing system and that normally deposits of lime do not form in tissues other than bone and cartilage. In some instances, however, lime may accumulate either as a part of some healing process or as the result of disease. For example, we depend upon calcium as one of the healing forces in tuberculosis, that is, an inflamed area may be walled off or inclosed within a shell of fibrous tissues reinforced with calcium. Sometimes flakes of lime will be found in large blood vessels (particularly the aorta) that have become diseased.

Lime deposits in the skin (called calcinosis) have been noted. These areas vary in size from a pinhead to that of a marble, and occur most frequently on the inside of the hand and the sides of the thumb and of the first two fingers. They may be found also on the elbows, wrists, knees and ankle joints. At first the skin over the nodules seems normal, but as enlargement becomes manifest signs of inflammation accompanied by pain will be observed. Later, cracks in the skin appear, from which exudes a creamy material mixed with particles of lime which have the feel of sand.

When examined chemically these nodules are found to contain a large amount of calcium phosphate, with a smaller amount of calcium carbonate. Similar collections may be found in the capillaries, in the sweat glands and ducts, and along nerve trunks. As we would expect when nerves become involved, considerable pain may be present.

A typical case described by M. J. Costello is that of a woman aged 44, who gave a history of abnormally cold hands and feet. She occasionally showed blanching of the fingers and toes, followed by marked blueness of the skin, a situation simulating Raynaud's disease. An X-ray disclosed what appeared to be irregular fragments of bone imbedded in the skin. The patient was able to carry on her daily work without difficulty except for the pain and annoyance caused by the nodules. Following surgical removal the wounds healed slowly.

Citrus Fruits Will Brighten Winter Menus

By Dorothea Duncan.

THE QUALITY of oranges and grapefruit is as fine as at any time this season. They are sweet, juicy and fine-textured. Why not use them more frequently to brighten winter menus?

Winter menus are sometimes lacking in fresh fruits, because more attention is given to energy foods—starches and proteins, for example. Besides these foods that keep the body warm we must remember that foods that give vitamins and minerals also must be included to bring us a perfectly balanced diet.

Oranges and Honey.

Orange juice is a breakfast ritual in many American homes, but it is not the only way in which oranges may be served for the first meal of the day. Try them tomorrow as suggested in the following breakfast menu.

This BUSINESS of LIVING

Deeply Hurt by Men's Amorous Advances, Girl of 17 Wonders if She Invites Misunderstanding by Drinking, Smoking and Kissing?

By Mary Haworth.

DEAR MISS HAWORTH: I am 17 years of age, though I look older and am considered fairly good looking and a fairly good dancer—just an average girl, hundreds of whom live in Washington. Ever since I was 12 I have been having dates and going out in foursomes, of course, with young men.

Now, here is my problem. Whenever I go out with a young man it seems because he buys me a couple of drinks and dances with me a few times he thinks he owns me, body and soul. And when I refuse to yield to their desires they get angry, take me home and don't call again. Is it because I drink and smoke with them and allow them to kiss me that they feel this way? If that is so, why don't they act the same toward my sister and girl friends?

* * * *

My sister allows them far more liberties than I do, such as kissing her in public and telling slightly naughty stories, yet they are perfect gentlemen with her and then act like perfect bores with me. Sometimes it is as long as three or four months before they make the first move and sometimes on the first or second night out, but it always ends up the same way. The usual pleas and declarations of love are made, but yet no word about marriage.

I have talked with some of these men and they always admit they have no respect for a girl who will yield to them and most certainly would not marry such a girl. And I have asked them if there is anything about the way I talk and act that gives them such ideas. They invariably answer, "Of course not. It's the way I feel." I am writing to ask if you can tell me why this is. I am absolutely disgusted with the male sex and for the past month have refused to go out.

* * * *

Should I cut out all drinking while out? I never get drunk and giddy like some of the girls in our parties, and as for smoking, everybody does that and I really enjoy smoking. As for kissing, all the men tell me the more they kiss me the greater their desire grows, and won't believe me when I tell them it has absolutely no effect on me. Should I stop kissing, too? I am really puzzled over this matter. Yours truly,

SEVENTEEN.

Problem Rooted in Physical Magnetism.

DEAR SEVENTEEN: Your problem may have its roots in an excessive endowment of physical magnetism for men. Should this be the case, you will need to exercise much greater restraint in your relationships with men than would a girl of lesser physical appeal, if you don't wish to be misunderstood by them and constantly bewildered and hurt by their reaction to you.

Suppose you do exert a highly potent physical appeal to men. This, added to the challenge of being superficially sophisticated seventeen, who smokes, drinks and permits all her admirers to take their fill of kisses, is an explosive combination—extremely likely to burn the fingers of all who play with it.

* * * *

No doubt your admirers, as well as yourself, are for the most part acting in ignorance of the dangerously charged currents of biological urge with which you are meddling when you indulge in alcoholically stimulated love making. Then, too, many young men believe daring amorous advances are expected of them by young girls who assume an air of blase experience. They launch such overtures as a routine gesture without realizing their terrific underlying significance and may, under certain circumstances or with a given woman, find themselves at the mercy of a Frankenstein who holds the power to reduce them to the status of beast.

Sex is an electric force to be respected, not fooled with. This is a lesson you have already learned, if only you knew how to turn the lesson to constructive account. Don't hate and despise your boy friends for their involuntary submission to biologic compulsions which they haven't the maturity either to understand or to bring under intellectual control. They, quite as much as yourself in such situations, are the victims of reckless and ignorant experiment.

* * * *

No doubt in their secret hearts they suffer the same mingled emotions of shame, anger, confusion and defeat which darken your days after such an experience, and if, through lack of understanding of the laws of life, you hate them, no doubt by the same token they childishly hate you and avoid your company thereafter. You hold them entirely responsible for what happened. They vaguely feel themselves not wholly to blame and place the guilt at your door without thinking things through.

Sex a Spiritual Factor in Life.

MY ADVICE TO YOU is to take a new and different attitude toward men hereafter. Don't attempt to pattern your conduct after that of your sister or your girl friends. Since, obviously, you are made of different stuff which commands a different reaction from men, you must cut the pattern of your conduct accordingly. Smoke if you must; drink if you can do so in a well-bred, temperate way, but remember that in doing either you are identifying yourself in a measure with a type to which you do not properly belong: Namely, the brittle and oversophisticated young modern.

* * * *

You are essentiallly naive, sensitive, idealistic and fundamentally steadfast to traditional codes of proper behavior. Smoking and drinking at best are unlovely habits which add nothing to what should be the sweet appeal of 17 to a man's finest protective instincts. Could you swear off for five years, say? Most important of all, develop such a respect for yourself, such an understanding of the make-up of men, and such an appreciation of sex as one of the great spiritual factors in life as will not permit you to submit your body carelessly to all men's arms.

M. H.

Applications Of Motor Lines Deluge I. C. C.

Midnight Deadline Sees Crates, Boxes Filled With Documents.

After repeated warnings to interstate bus and truck operators that they must file their operating applications before midnight of February 12, the Interstate Commerce Commission last night found itself literally deluged with applications as the deadline hour arrived. The deadline was set under the new motor carriers act which provides the first national regulation of bus and truck traffic.

While the exact number of the applications, piled high in boxes and crates in the offices of John Rogers, director of the Bureau of Motor Carriers, and H. M. Roberts, chief of certificates in the Insurance Section, could not be determined last night, it was estimated at between 50,000 and 100,000.

A deluge of reports, statistics, applications and route maps fell upon the Public Utilities Commission at the same time. The PUC sits with the ICC as a joint board under certain conditions.

No application may be considered if it failed to arrive by midnight, under the law, and it was said the commission will have to formulate the policy to be followed with regard to those who, for any reason, failed to file.

Although the applications were coming in at a staggering rate late yesterday, it was estimated that about 200,000 application blanks had been sent out, and the number still unreturned was at least equal to the number received.

The commission eventually will hold a hearing to determine the status—so far as general application of the law is concerned—of common and contract carriers operating in such metropolitan areas as Washington and vicinity, where jurisdictions of one or more State laws are crossed in the ordinary course of business.

Rates and charges of the carriers will be subject to supervision, as will their qualifications and hours for employes and the safety of their equipment.

James Maryin, secretary to the District's Public Utilities Commission, said yesterday the first hearing involving the District Commission has been called by the I. C. C. for February 24. It concerns the business of the Pan-American bus lines.

Mine Leader to Speak.

John Brothy, director of the committee on industrial organization of the United Mine Workers, will address the Young Democratic Club of the District of Columbia tonight at the Willard Hotel. Truck and Bus Applications Flood ICC Office

Post Staff Photo.

With the deadline set yesterday for the new motor carriers act, applications flooded the Public Utilities Commission. Here John L. Rogers, director of the Bureau of Motor Carriers, and H. M. Roberts, chief of certificates of the insurance section, more or less flounder amid thousands of reports and maps.

French Decree Exile For 2 Syrian Leaders

Beirut, Syria, Feb. 12 (AP).—Authorities tonight ordered two Nationalist leaders—Nessib Bakry and Djemil Mardan—sent into exile after their arrest at Damascus.

The two were charged by Count Damnien de Martel, French high commissioner, with planning agitation which officials believed might result in bloodshed.

The commissioner also sought to prevent mobs from forming by warning that any gathering of more than two persons would be considered "objectionable" and partsipants subject to arrest.

Damascus lawyers announced a strike for Saturday and American University authorities moved to prevent a threatened strike of students.

On the Air Today

ED WYNN is on your dials again. Forget all about the old pattern of Wynn and McNamee because the "perfect fool" has created an entirely new character for his air series—which begins today at 9:30 p. m., WJSV. Wynn will appear as "Gulliver—the Traveler," patterned something after the Dean Swift story of "Gulliver's Travels."

John S. Young has been selected as comedy foil and announcer for the show. Interestingly enough, it is his first C. B. S. appearance. But like Jimmy Wallington, he finds green grass in the next pasture when an ace funny man of the airways calls.

Of his new role, Wynn says: "Everyone at one time or another has dreamed of being a big shot in a land where his slightest word is law. And on the other hand, how often do we feel that we are just midgets in a world of giants? The idea of change of size or importance has proved fascinating for writers since the beginning of the world's history.

"The lid is off under such circumstances. Anything can happen. There's opportunity for comedy, satire, slap-stick. I've already got more ideas about the role than I know what to do with."

Now, all he has to do is make it stick with an audience accustomed to Jack Benny, Phil Baker, Fred Allen, Burns and Allen and other comedy leaders.

Beginning Friday night at 11:15, WRC, the Gypsy Ministrels and Louis Brown, pianist of the Fats Waller stamp, will begin a month's worth of weekly engagements as a result of Shannon Allen's first program in a revived "Airbreaks" series. These two contestants were judged best in the first program last week and as a reward will be presented on the air, leading perhaps to permanent work. The Minstrels are Jacques Ward, singing accordionist, and Pierre Wolf, violinist.

In answer to Thomas S. Evans' query: Stoopnagle and Budd are not now on the air, to the best of my knowledge. Columbia announced several weeks ago that the famous comedy team would be reunited following the colonel's vacation trip to California and would be heard "in February." Newspaper accounts last week advised that the colonel had completed his vacation (a divorce in Nevada) and so we may expect to hear their nonsense any moment now.

Bing Crosby: Presents Spencer Tracy and Alice Faye, of the films; Vi Bradley, pianist, WRC, at 10.

Wideman Quits U. S. Post; Lost Case for AAA

Roosevelt Lauds Record of Cummings' Assistant in Accepting Resignation.

By the Associated Press.

The resignation of Frank J. Wideman, who, as Assistant Attorney General, presented the Government's unsuccessful case against AAA tax injunctions before the Supreme Court, yesterday was accepted by President Roosevelt.

The Palm Beach, Fla., attorney told the President in a letter that "impelling business reasons" caused his withdrawal. Mr. Roosevelt accepted with "regret" and said his record was one of which he could be "proud."

Wideman, whose tax division prepared the Government's arguments in support of the AAA and planned the Federal strategy in opposing nearly 2,000 injunction suits to stop collection of the AAA processing taxes, will return to private practice in West Palm Beach and in Washington.

He is the sixth "key man" to leave the Attorney General's executive staff in the last year. In resigning, however, Wideman immediately was assigned as a part-time assistant to the Attorney General to try Government tax cases.

The President's letter to Wideman follows:

"Dear Frank:

"It is with very real regret that I accept your resignation as Assistant Attorney General.

"You have rendered outstanding service in the Department of Justice and you leave a record of which you have every right to be proud.

"The Attorney General informs me that he has asked you to continue to handle certain litigation of high importance of which you had supervision, and it is my hope that you can arrange your affairs so as to do so.

"With best wishes for your success in the practice of your profession, I am, very sincerely yours,

"FRANKLIN D. ROOSEVELT."

After receiving reports that Wideman had won 10 of the 11 cases he argued before the Supreme Court last year, the President also wrote a note to Attorney General Cummings, saying, "this record of Wideman is grand. Congratulate him for me. F. D. R."

Statler Heiress 'Emotions' Told

Carthage, N. C., Feb. 12 (AP).—Mrs. Elva Statler Davidson was depicted as suffering emotional difficulties which once led her to consult a psychiatrist, and as having been depressed shortly before her carbon monoxide death, in testimony today in the $560,000 suit over her will.

Dr. Richard P. Stetson, of Boston, who treated the Statler heiress in 1933, said in a deposition read by attorneys for Statler interests who are contesting her will that he regarded her as "somewhat unstable," and Herbert Vail, of Pinehurst, testified she was "in a depressed state of mind" when he and his wife dined at her home a few weeks before her death last February 27.

By agreement the possible question of her mental competence has been ruled from the suit, and the allegation of the caveators is that there was undue influence in the making of the will from her husband, H. Bradley Davidson, jr., and from W. Barton Leach, Harvard law professor, who drafted it. Davidson is the principal beneficiary of her estate under the will.

Contact Planned With Kidnap Band

Guadalajara, Mexico, Feb. 12 (AP). Immediate efforts to establish contact with the bandit kidnapers of Samuel C. Faneuf, American mining official, were planned tonight.

Paul Avery, business associate of Faneuf, who was kidnaped Monday, also and released yesterday to arrange for ransom, said he would leave either tonight or tomorrow to negotiate personally with the bandits.

A federal cavalry detachment is following the bandits, but is not attempting a capture, pending outcome of negotiations. The amount of the ransom demanded is still undisclosed.

Associates expressed confidence Faneuf was safe as long as the troops did not molest the kidnapers.

Authorities said they were convinced that Candelario Rojas, insurgent leader, heads the band.

The wife of the kidnap victim, Mrs. Hortensia Faneuf, said today in San Francisco she was relieved when told that Rojas was in charge of Faneuf.

Suspect Is Cleared In Bank Holdup

Officials of the Old Dominion Bank of Ballston, Va., last night failed to identify a suspect arrested by Washington detectives as one of two men who Monday escaped with $2,000 after holding up the bank.

The prisoner, a former convict, said to answer the description of the younger of the stick-up men, was picked up on Pennsylvania avenue northwest by Lieut. C. P. Cox and Detective Sergts. Elmer Lewis, Earl Baker and J. J. Tolson.

Detectives arrested the man after he had been observed loitering on the street for several hours. Police said he had served a three-year term at Lorton Reformatory for larceny.

ABC Liquor Control Here Called 'Model'

Reporter Finds Only 1 Law Violation in Tour of Licensed Places.

Editor's note: Washington has 1,674 licensed liquor and beer dealers. In an effort to ascertain conditions prevailing since the repeal of the Eighteenth Amendment, The Post has assigned a reporter to accompany enforcement officers of the ABC Board on their daily tours of inspection. This is the first in a series of stories.)

Under strict and constant supervision by enforcement officers of the Alcoholic Beverage Control Board, Washington has become a model "repeal" city.

The word "model" is used with reservations. It is based on observations during the past several days and nights. No one pretends that every Washington liquor dealer and consumer is obeying regulations to the letter. The law has been broken in the past, and it will be broken in the future. And that is where the enforcement officers come in.

It is their duty to see that A. B. C. regulations are adhered to, and their task is not an easy one. It calls for diplomacy, tact, courtesy—and sometimes a few "strong-arm" methods.

There are eight of these enforcement officers, all members of the police special investigation squad. They work in pairs, covering the entire city. Their work is tedious and long—sometimes 17 hours a day.

Their work is not without excitement. In addition to policemen, they must be actors—and good ones —as well. In some cases they are known to the various liquor dealers and bar operators, while at other times they work in secrecy. Their identities are veiled in the guise of patrons.

Touring Companions.

Since Saturday night we have visited all types of licensed places —cafes, stores, hotels and night clubs—in the the company of Officers Robert V. Murray and Winfred D. Young, A. B. C. inspectors attached to the squad of Lieut. George M. Little.

We "looked in" on at least 50 places. We posed as salesmen, transients, tourists, down-and-outers and just ordinary customers. During the entire tour, we saw two "drunks," and only one dealer was cited for a violation—sale to an intoxicated person.

One of the first visits was made to a small delicatessen store near McKinley Technical High School. There had been a complaint to the ABC Board that the proprietor was selling beer to school children. He was operating on a class B license—off-sale beer.

Neither officer was known to the proprietor, so we accompanied Young to the store, posing as a couple of salesmen—with nothing to sell.

Empty Sample Case.

Young carried an empty "sample case." Several youngsters were in the place and we ordered something to eat and wandered into a rear room. Standing near a window, bottles in hand, were three boys, the oldest probably 17.

They were drinking what looked like beer. The labels looked like beer labels. The bottles looked like beer bottles.

But they weren't. The youngsters were consuming a soft drink. It was bottled to resemble beer, we haven't any idea why. Whoever filed the complaint apparently saw these children drinking soda pop and thought it was something else.

The proprietor was very conscientious.

"I have to be very careful," he said. "Sometimes I can't tell how old they are. But I always try. If they look too young, they don't get beer."

He still didn't know who we were. But when we asked if he would sell us a bottle of beer to drink on the premises, he refused and even became angry.

That night we made the rounds of several places catering to service men and laborers. They were very orderly.

While seated in a restaurant on Seventh street southwest, we saw a "drunk" so intoxicated that he couldn't walk without staggering.

But the waitress knew him. She called him by his first name, and when he asked for another drink she served him. The proprietor, who saw the man drinking, will appear before the ABC Board to explain.

Soviet Envoy to Leave After 15 Years Here

BORIS E. SKVIRSKY.

Boris Skvirsky Was Diplomatic 'Ghost' Until Treaty in 1933.

Fifteen years of service in this country will soon be ended for Boris E. Skvirsky, counselor of the Soviet Embassy, who has been appointed ambassador to Afghanistan.

More than any other person, Skvirsky was responsible for the recognition and re-establishment of diplomatic relations between this country and the Soviet Union. It was his preliminary work here that made the Litvinoff trip and the final agreement possible.

"I feel that the renewal of relations between our two countries was a very important step in the direction of world peace," said Skvirsky yesterday. "Both the United States and the Soviet Union are strong forces for peace in the world today.

"As long as we were apart and there was a lack of understanding, our influence in the cause of peace was much weakened," continued Skvirsky, "but the gradual improvement of relations between our countries has been a step forward toward world understanding and co-operation."

Years of Waiting.

There were many long years of waiting and bitter disappointments before the final agreements were reached in 1933. Skvirsky was here for 11 years without official standing, during several "red scares," and was even called before the Fish committee to testify, without once getting into "hot water."

Some of his experiences during his life as a diplomatic "ghost" in this country are amusing. One day, during the prohibition era, Mme. Skvirski noticed a peculiar odor coming from the cellar of their Connecticut avenue home.

Upon inquiry she discovered that the cook had set up a still in the cellar and was manufacturing home brew. With the greatest possible haste the equipment was removed, and the cook was called upon for an explanation.

"Dat's all right," she said, "I knows you all has got diplomatic mutinies."

Another time the Skvirskys decided to have a small radio set installed. Before the antenna had been up 24 hours, two ladies who lived in the neighborhood had started action to have the "red propaganda station in direct communication with Moscow" removed as a public menace.

During the 11 years here as a "ghost," Skvirsky handled all problems which arose in connection with relations between the two countries. It was he who arranged for the transfer of the bodies of the American soldiers from Archangel back to this country.

When the American flier, Eielson and Borland, were lost in Siberia it was he who made arrangements with the Soviet government to have a rescue expedition sent out.

"It has meant 15 years out of my life," said Skvirsky, "but I have enjoyed it very much. I've come to have a very great respect for America, and I shall miss my many American friends. However, I have never been to Central Asia, and it will be an interesting experience.

"The position of Afghanistan, bordering as it does on China, India and Persia, will give me a good chance to learn about conditions in that part of the world, and it is interesting, too, because three of the seven republics of the Soviet Union, Turkestan, Uzbek and Tadjik, are located in Central Asia.

By the Associated Press.

The censorship dictator of the Soviet government soon is to come to Washington as a high official of the Russian embassy.

He is Konstantine Umansky, who, as chief of the press section of the foreign office, has for more than five years directed the Moscow regime's rigid censorship of all news dispatches sent from the Soviet capital by foreign correspondents.

Announcement was made yesterday that Umansky is being transferred to Washington to succeed Boris Skvirsky as counselor of embassy. He will rank second only to Ambassador Alexander Troyanovsky.

Umansky, who is in his early thirties, has had a rapid rise in the Soviet's foreign service. As a foreign correspondent for Tass, the official Soviet news agency, he attracted the attention of Maxim Litvinoff, Soviet commissar for foreign affairs, and was drafted in 1930 to become head of the foreign office press section.

He was generally known among correspondents in Moscow as uncompromising in his refusal to pass dispatches if he thought that they contained any matter which might be against the interests of the Soviet government abroad. Without his official signatory or that of one of his three assistants, no news dispatch could be transmitted abroad.

He accompanied Litvinoff to Washington in 1933 for the foreign commissar's recognition negotiations with President Roosevelt.

Playgrounds of Cork Surface Planned to Protect Children

An experiment with improved surfacing for school playgrounds consisting of a mixture of peat moss and cork as a substitute for the present cinder surfacings will be launched soon by the District Repair Shop, The Post learned yesterday.

The new composite surfacing, developed after five months of laboratory testing, will be used for the first time in this city—and as far as is known in the country—at the Peabody School, Fifth and C streets northeast.

The necessary materials are now being purchased by the city and work probably will commence "as soon as the weather clears up," according to W. A. Draper, engineer in charge of the repair shop.

Preparation of the new surfacing was undertaken at the request of the Board of Education after repeated complaints were received from parents that children using the playgrounds received severe abrasions when they fell and returned home covered with "soot" from the cinder dust. At present more than 150 school playgrounds have cinder surfacings.

In laying the new surfacing, a foundation of stable clay would be put down first. On this would be placed a layer of peat moss, reinforced by cotton fabric and topped by granulated cork which it is hoped will prove resilient and easy on the bones of children if they trip and fall.

Draper estimated the cost of the new peat-cork playgrounds would be 20 per cent higher than cinder surfacings. Much of the cinders used were obtained from the boiler plants operated in the various schools.

Auto Mishaps Laid to Poor Street Lights

Sub-Committee Members Demand Illumination Be Restored.

Cost Would Be No More Due to Rate Cuts, Kern Asserts.

Inadequate street lighting was responsible for a large percentage of Washington's traffic fatalities during 1935, it was charged yesterday before the special House sub-committee investigating causes and cures of local traffic ills.

This charge was followed by demands from committee members that street lights, dimmed or eliminated by an economy move in 1934, be restored to normal.

The lighting discussion came during testimony of Walter E. Kern, District electrical engineer. He said that Washington's street illumination program could now be returned to its original strength without an increased appropriation. This can be done, he said, because of recent rate reductions by the Potomac Electric Power Co.

No Financial Drawback.

Representative Carpenter (Democrat), Kansas, chairman of the subcommittee, and Representative Wood (Democrat), Missouri, asked Kern why the curtailed program had not been restored to a normal basis.

"The Commissioners have not ordered the lights restored, but I hope they will soon," Kern replied.

"Do you know of any financial reason why the lights cannot be turned back to full capacity?" was the next question.

"No, sir," answered Kern. "I will recommend that they be fully restored in the interest of safety."

"We want that done," said Wood.

Under the present reduced rate schedule, the lighting item of $805,000 now in the District budget will permit full-time operation of street lights during the coming fiscal year, Kern declared.

He warned the sub-committee it should take steps to prevent a reduction in lighting estimates for the 1937 fiscal year. These estimates are now under consideration by the House sub-committee on appropriations, he added.

City to Save $71,000.

The District will save approximately $71,000 this year by the reduction in lighting rates, Kern told the sub-committee. The total cost of operation last year was $699,652, he said. Traffic signal lights cost $24,143 to operate.

"They are the most dangerous intersections in town," he said. "I go around those intersections if I can avoid them. It seems to me the safety experts—if we have any—have gone far afield in not providing better illumination for those corners."

It was explained by M. O. Eldridge, assistant traffic director, that the Department of Vehicles and Traffic plans to replace these hand signals with electric traffic lights.

Pressure of other business forced the sub-committee to adjourn until February 25.

Rescue Flier Wins Mercy in Speeding

George C. Brinkerhoff, who was arrested Saturday night while driving 40 miles an hour to get medical supplies for his sixth flight to ice-bound Tangier Island, was fined $10 and the sentence suspended yesterday.

Judge Walter J. Casey suspended the sentence of the 38-year-old pilot who lives at 38 T street northeast. Brinkerhoff is manager of the College Park Airport, and has made five flights to relieve the suffering of the islanders.

Saturday, when he was loading his plane for the sixth flight, he noticed he needed additional medical supplies. He started for Emergency Hospital, but was arrested by Policeman W. B. Hopkins on Rhode Island avenue northwest.

Judge Casey pointed out that Brinkerhoff was on an emergency errand and doing a commendable humanitarian act. Therefore, he stated, he would suspend sentence.

Auto Reunion

Cousins Find Each Other by Speeding Arrests.

"My name is Frank Figart."

"My name is William Figart."

The two men turned and looked at each other. They were standing side by side in the Second Police Precinct Station. Both had been arrested for speeding. Both were giving their names to a station clerk.

"Where are you from?" asked one man.

"Altoona, Pa. Where are you from?"

"Altoona, Pa."

And the two first cousins were reunited. Their fathers were brothers. Both have been living in Washington for several years. Neither knew the other was here.

In Traffic Court yesterday, both were fined $10 on the speeding charges—but they agreed it was worth it.

Senate Group Plans Leave Report Today

Civil Service Committee to Get Changes by McKellar.

Favorable Action Expected to Prevent Endangering Entire Bill.

A favorable report on amended Government leave bills is expected to be made by the Senate Civil Service Committee following an executive session at 11 o'clock this morning.

Senator McKellar (Democrat), of Tennessee, who has objected to passage of the bills under unanimous consent, has drafted his proposed amendments for submission to the committee. Senator Copeland (Democrat), of New York, and other sponsors of the leave measures have indicated a willingness to accept the compromise rather than endanger the whole bill.

If McKellar's amendments are adopted, the 30-day annual leave will be made to include holidays and Sundays, and the accumulative provisions of both the vacation and the sick leave bills will be reduced below 120 days, as now provided.

In addition, McKellar wants a proviso that a physician's certificate be required to establish cause for made applicable to all Government sick leave and that both bills be employes on an equitable basis.

Senator McKellar yesterday afternoon conferred with representatives of the Government employe organizations regarding several bills to amend the civil service retirement act, but reached no agreement. As a consequence, the sub-committee which he heads will hold a hearing on the measures at 2 o'clock this afternoon.

The leave bills probably will be passed by the Senate and sent to conference this week if no further complications arise in the Civil Service Committee meeting today.

Roberts Plans To Lead Fight On Bus Merger

The proposal of the Capital Transit Co. to purchase the Washington Rapid Transit Co. bus line for the sum of $539,000 will meet with the opposition of People's Counsel William A. Roberts, it was learned yesterday.

The people's counsel is making plans to fight for a dratic reduction in the price when hearings on the purchase are held on February 19 before the Public Utilities Commission.

Roberts said he will insist upon a purchase price commensurate with the actual value of the company, which now has $110,000 worth of equipment.

He also will insist upon the transfer of $870 000 in depreciation reserves from the Washington Rapid Transit Co. to the new company. Immediate merger of the physical property of the two companies will also be demanded, he said.

Engineers are now bringing the valuation figures of the Washington Rapid Transit Co. up to date. A valuation of the company was made in 1934, when a previous offer of the latter company to absorb the bus line was rejected by the commission.

Thief Gets $5,000 From 3 Apartments

Three apartment house dwellers in the 1300 block of Massachusetts avenue northwest lost property worth a total of more than $5,000 yesterday to a "jimmy" thief who systematically looted their apartments.

In each case, the residents, all three of them women, returned to their apartments to find they had been entered and ransacked. Each of the three apartments was on a different floor of the building.

The heavy loser was Emily Jenkins, who reported that five bonds, each valued at $1,000, had been taken. Ina Mann lost $25 in jewelry and Sylvia Pollow, a small sum of money.

Auto Inspection Depot Urged to Cut Accidents

William A. Van Duzer, director of traffic, outlined problems that confront the traffic director and the Police Department in a talk before the American University Park Citizens Association last night.

A District-owned and operated station for semiannual inspection of automobiles, one of the points outlined by Van Duzer, was indorsed by the association. A charge of $1 for the first year of inspection and 50 cents thereafter, would be employed for its upkeep, he said.

Mrs. Norton Will Back Ellenbogen's Rent Bill

Representative Mary Morton, chairman of the House District Committee, yesterday told delegates from the Central Labor Union committee on rents that she would support the Ellenoogen rent bill when it reaches the floor of the House. Ten members of the committee, led by Dorothy Cline, chairman, called on Mrs. Norton at her office during the day.

It was announced last night by the committee that March 5 has been definitely selected for the rent mass meeting to be sponsored by them. It will be held in the Central High School auditorium.

Blazer of Gobi Desert Trail Visits in Capital

Thomas Allen, Who Crossed Sands in Early '90's, Gives Talk.

"Better 50 years in Europe than a cycle of Cathay" was Tennyson's cry, but after spending the last 40 years of his life in the Western world, Thomas Allen still would exchange them all for the two years he spent bicycling in the Orient.

Staying at the Shoreham in Washington for a few days before returning to England, Allen referred, with mingled regret and pleasure, to the famous trip which he and another college chum made in 1890.

"After graduating from Washington University in St. Louis, Mo., a friend of mine, William Sachtleben, and I decided to see the world," said Allen, "so we set out immediately after graduation for Europe. In London we obtained passports, and everybody said goodby to us for what they thought would be the last time."

The story of what these two young men did from there on made history. One has only to look at the newspapers of the time to see the vivid accounts of their journey. One of the most amusing experiences which the two travelers had was described by Allen.

Celebrated on Mountain Top.

"On the Fourth of July, in 1891, we celebrated our Independence Day on the top of Mount Ararat, which then was the meeting place of the three most autocratic governments of the time, Russia, Turkey and Persia," said Allen with a smile. "We felt something had to be done, so we unfurled the small American flag which we had with us and tied it to our ice picks. Then to further demonstrate our freedom, we fired off our revolver."

From here they plunged into the interior, and for months at a time they were completely out of touch with everything that was going on in the outside world. Finally, after a year and a half of steady traveling, they came to the Chinese border; contrary to all expectations they were able to go from the border across the Gobi Desert and, following the route of Marco Polo, reach Peking.

"When we reached the capital of China nobody seemed to be able to believe us at first," continued Mr. Allen. "The Chinese prime minister, Li-Hung-Chang, sent for us and spent an hour and a half explaining to us that no white man had been over that route since Marco Polo, and he asked us all sorts of questions. He was much worse than any reporter."

Has Lived Varied Life.

Since then Allen has had a varied life. When he returned to America he worked as a newspaper man for a while and covered the opening of the Trans-Siberian Railroad for the New York Herald.

Returning from Russia, he met a Scottish girl on the boat, married her, and has lived in England ever since. In recent years he was connected with the British Oxygen Co., the largest chemical gas company in the British empire. It has 40 factories in England, and supplies most of the chemicals used in English factories.

"I have enjoyed my trip very much this time," added Allen, "because for the first time in 40 years I saw Sachtleben, the man with whom I crossed Asia. When I was in Los Angeles I heard he was in a small town in Texas, so I at once called him up on the telephone and he came up to see me and talk over old times."

Disappointed

Disappointment greeted the thief who stole a 50-pound box, labeled "Scotch Whisky," from a Department of Commerce truck parked in the 200 block Fourth street southwest, yesterday.

The box, made of cardboard, did not contain spirits but merely blank records of the defunct NRA, in transit from Dallas, Tex., to Washington, reported Dewitt F. Drew, colored driver of the truck, in reporting the theft to police.

Woman's Cries Lead to Chase, Capture of Mate, Held Insane

A woman's creams echoed loudly in the big waiting room of Union Station last night, calling the attention of waiters for trains to a fleeing man who crashed into a plate-glass door, picked himself up and ran out of the station.

First Precinct Policeman Levi Kinney pursued the man across the station plaza, and captured him in the deep snow. The man's wrist was cut by the door glass. He was booked for mental observation and removed to Gallinger Hospital for treatment.

The screaming woman identified herself as Mrs. Irene Goldman, of Winthrop, Mass., and said that the man, Louis Goldman, was her husband. He had been a mental patient at the MacLean Hospital at Waverly, Mass., she told police, and had recently been released. Three days ago, he left home, she said, and was located here. She was taking him back to Massachusetts.

Plight of 1865 Is Compared With Our Day

'Inspiration' Can Be Drawn From Hardships, Says Col. R. S. Henry.

Persons discouraged by the depression could draw "distinct inspiration" from a study of reconstruction days in the South, Col. Ralph Selph Henry, historian, said last night at McKinley Technical High School.

The author of "The Story of the Confederacy" told how several Southern railroads, with few "assets" other than barrels of worthless Confederate greenbacks, "went to work" after the War Between the States and paid off vast debts.

"My guess," he said, "is we'll do like they did and sooner or later we'll come out of the depression, if we haven't already. Anywhow, our struggle doesn't even compare with theirs."

Train crews, he added, were compelled to use their ingenuity in maintaining service during the "Railroad War" of the sixties. Trains had to be constantly guarded from theft by raiders, and railroads thought nothing of picking up passengers while running their trains on the tracks of another line.

In many instances, he said, no ledgers were available for bookkeeping and railroads kept their records on loose paper.

The historian's audience of night-school students was held almost spellbound as he related how "The General," a Southern train, was stolen by Federal raiders in Georgia during the Civil War and retaken by Confederate forces and civilians after a 100-mile chase in which the pursuers used three locomotives and and a hand car.

Organizer to Talk On Sharecroppers

The plight of Southern sharecroppers will be described to the Friends Forum Sunday night in the Friends Meeting House, 1811 I street northwest, by Howard Kester, organizer of the Southern Tenant Farmers' Union.

The Forum meeting, open to the public, is one of a series this month dealing with various phases of the tenant farm problem.

Kester is expected to describe events of last week leading to his departure for the East in an effort to recruit aid for Arkansas farm workers. A week ago Kester narrowly escaped lynching while conducting a meeting of these workers at Earle, Ark., Forum officials said.

In addition to relating these experiences, Kester is expected to assail the Federal relief policies in the South, which, he asserts, ignore the sharecroppers.

City Workers To Pay Debts Or Lose Jobs

But Creditors Are Told to Keep Extensions Within Incomes.

Order Also Gives Life's Necessities a Prior Claim on Wages.

Employes of the District government who do not pay their just debts will face dismissal from service under an order issued yesterday by the District Commissioners.

In some respects the new order is more favorable to the employe than previous orders dealing with employes' credit obligations.

In the new order, the creditors are placed on notice that employes will not be required to pay for extensions of credit which are beyond the employes' ability to pay.

Applies to D. C. Employes.

The new rules were drafted by a committee of Federal and District chief clerks. The order yesterday is applicable only to District employes. Adoption of the rules by Federal departments is expected later.

An employe who disregards just debts without reasonable cause is subject to dismissal by the Commissioners.

An employe should not incur debts beyond his ability to pay within a reasonable time.

The District recognizes that granting of credit and making of legal loans to workers in cases of necessity is of mutual interest to the employe and to business.

Note Indorsers Warned.

An employe who indorses a note must understand that he may obligate himself to full responsibility.

Firms or individuals, to receive considerations of their claims against District workers, must show that credit was not extended until the employe's record and ability to pay had been investigated.

Creditors must present detailed records about purchases, loans, etc.

Complaints relative to nonpayment of loans at usurious rates of interest will not be recognized.

In cases where an employe admits the justice of a debt, he will be expected to make reasonable payments to liquidate the debt, but the primary necessities of life shall have priority claim upon an employe's salary.

Hearing to Be Held On Clear Title Bill

A public hearing will be held at 10:30 tomorrow morning on the District Commissioners' bill to enable them to get clear titles on property bid in at auction for delinquent taxes. The hearing will be before the judiciary sub-committee of the House District Committee.

The measure, which Chairman Blanton, of the District Appropriations sub-committee, has promised to support is intended to relieve the District of the responsibility of finding everyone who may have some claim to the property, however remote, before obtaining title.

Under the present law, the District must name all "interested parties" as defendants in a suit to acquire title of property bid in at a tax sale. This has proved impossible in many cases, with the result that the District holds a deal of property that it cannot acquire title to.

The new legislation authorizes the Commissioners to name the last recorded owner as defendant and to notify all other interested parties by publication of notice of the suit.

Retired Printer's Death Due to Heart Disease

Through error, it was stated in The Post of February 7 that William Jack, 70, a retired printer of the Bureau of Engraving and Printing, who was found dead in his apartment at 419 East Capitol street, was a suicide.

This was not true. Coroner A. Magruder MacDonald issued a certificate of death due to heart disease. The Post regreats the error.

Maxwell Anderson's Notable Play of "Winterset" Is Due Here Week of March 30

Is Addition to List of Year's Notable Works

By Nelson B. Bell.

It was stated in a line or two in these dispatches yesterday that Maxwell Anderson's latest drama of "Winterset" would be a later booking at the National Theater.

A bulletin from that able theatrical publicist, William Fields—"Bill" to you and me—makes known that this Washington engagement will be for the week beginning Monday, March 30.

"Winterset" is a grim sort of tale, as all of Mr. Anderson's dramas are apt to be, and is currently on view in the Martin Beck Theater in New York, where it opened last September.

Guthrie McClintic is the producer and also staged the piece, just as he stages all of the productions of his distinguished wife, Katharine Cornell.

Two superb settings required for this play, one of them an accurate and impressive carbon of the Brooklyn Bridge from the Manhattan end, were designed by Jo Mielziner, that prolific young scenic artist whose work has been so much in vogue of late—"The Farmer Takes a Wife," Miss Cornell's "Romeo and Juliet," etc., etc.—who is the brother of that competent young actor and director, Kenneth McKenna.

Boasts Distinguished Cast.

Appearing in their support are Theodore Hecht, Harold Johnsrud, Morton L. Stevens, Anatole Winogradoff, Eva Langbord, Billy Quinn, St. John Terrell, Abner Biberman, Anthony Blair and Harold Martin.

This is just one more addition to the most notable season the National Capital has enjoyed in the so-called "legitimate" theater in what amounts almost to a decade.

There are other premieres and notable road bookings that will come as surprises to the faithful of the theater when they are definitely set and officially announced. Take my word for it.

As a matter of fact, there may be a sensation or two among them.

The Quigley Publications, which are responsible for that Motion Picture Herald so often referred to in this column, announce with pardonable pride that they have become a part of New York's aristocracy of tenantry. They have moved into one of those altitudinous upper stories of that fabulous city within a city, known as Rockefeller Center. They are on the sixty-third floor of the towering center structure, or some such unheard of place!

Hampden Scores Again.

Walter Hampden, one of the foremost exponents of classic drama in America, still must be rated among that select group of leading actors who always may be relied upon to demonstrate that "the road" is not dead.

His tours, in whatever part of the country—like Eva Le Gallienne's, Katharine Cornell's, Helen Hayes', George M. Cohan's and a few others—have consistently attracted phenomenal box-office support. The present season seems to be no exception.

There was a $14,000 advance sale Saturday night for Hampden's farewell week in "Cyrano de Bergerac" at the Garrick Theater, Philadelphia.

By all accepted theatrical signs, this means that "Cyrano" will enjoy another of its regular full-house weeks, because two-thirds of the money capacity of the house was sold before the company reached the city.

Will Play Here.

This coming on top of a $5,089.50 performance in Hartford, and turn away business in Boston, Springfield, Mass., New Haven and Newark, shows that the Edmond Rostand heroic comedy, which Walter Hampden has made so peculiarly his own in this country, is still one of the most potent attractions in the American theater.

After Philadelphia, "Cyrano" moves on to Pittsburgh, Rochester, Buffalo, Cleveland, Columbus, Cincinnati, Indianapolis, St. Louis, Milwaukee, Chicago and Detroit, returning East for Easter week in Washington and the following week in Baltimore.

After that it will go into New York to add to the 561 performances it already has been given in the vicinity of Times Square.

I still contend that Harry P. Somerville, managing director of the Willard Hotel, is the best showman in Washington outside of the theater. In proof, I beg to submit the communication that accompanied an ornate package that was reposing upon my desk when I arrived at the office yesterday.

In it was a large, red apple and with the apple a tribute to Lincoln—it was his birthday, you know—and a reminder that when he lived at the Old Willard an apple was a part of his nightly ritual.

"Mr. Somerville takes a great deal of pleasure in having you share the now famous Willard tradition of the 'Lincoln Apple.'

"A particularly interesting note is added this year by the fact that a special box of apples was sent to Mr. Somerville from Mrs. Mary E. B. Miller, who has recently celebrated her ninety-fifth birthday. She is a native of Portsmouth, N. H., and when she heard of the 'Lincoln Apple' she was so thrilled that she wanted to participate.

"She states in her letter, which she has written in long-hand herself, that 'if these apples had been in the Garden of Eden I don't see how Eve could have failed to take one for herself and passed one on to Adam, feeling fully justified in doing so—do you?'

"If you would like to let this grand old lady know that you have shared her gift her address in Portsmouth, N. H., is 546 Pleasant street."

The apple being as luscious as it was, and Mrs. Miller having been as interested and as thoughtful as she was, I certainly shall drop her a line of Lincoln birthday appreciation. And that goes also for Mr. Somerville and his efficient secretary, Miss Cunningham.

"There ain't goin' to be no core."

New Play Approaches.

Mr. Arthur Levy, one of the veteran and more literate of the stentors of the theater, was a welcome visitor to the drama desk yesterday and had much to say in extollation of "Sweet Aloes," the new Lee Ephraim production in which Evelyn Laye is to be presented for the first time on any stage in the National Theater the week of Monday, February 24. That will be the attraction following the perennial revival of the Shubert's apparently imperishable "Blossom Time."

Mr. Levy, as a matter of fact, was attempting a task of supererogation in his effort to "sell" this department a favorable idea of the auspices under which this play is being produced.

We were completely captivated by Miss Laye during her brief visit to the Capital, when Mr. Ephraim had "Call It a Day" on the boards at the National. At that time we also had the pleasure of discussing the venture with Mr. Ephraim. We even had a quick peek at the script of "Sweet Aloes." It all seemed very promising to these fallible eyes and questionable intelligence.

Author to Play Part.

"Sweet Aloes," you will remember, is the work of Jay Mallory. Jay Mallory, as we previously have disclosed, is a nom de plume of a talented young woman by the real name of Joyce Carey.

Miss Carey has a penchant for acting as well as for writing. She will be seen in an important supporting role in her own play when Miss Laye returns to the Capital to appear in the stellar role which has been so successfully enacted in London by our old friend of the stage—"The Devil Passes"—and the screen—"Cavalcade," "The Last River" and numerous others—Miss Diana Wynyard.

This is an item of interest to those who take any serious interest in the traditional theater. It will be pleasant to find out what Miss Carey is all about.

Incidentally, Mr. Levy may have a play of his own coming along before long. If it eventuates, one is led to believe it will bear the title of "Sticks and Stones." From what I hear of it as a clever satire, it will be worth waiting for—and, as I have said before, never use a preposition to end a sentence with!

It will be a fine array of artists who will appear at the annual banquet of The Post's carrier boys in the Willard Hotel tonight.

Foremost among the list of distinguished artists who have agreed to be present is George M. Cohan, that first gentleman of the American theater who is appearing at the National this week in the title role of his new comedy-melodrama, "Dear Old Darling," on its way to the Alvin Theater in New York via a fortnight in Boston.

Others who have agreed to contribute their services to a gala entertainment of some 300 ambitious young men include Johnnie Burke, Ken Harvey and Ruthie Barnes from Loew's Fox; Audrey Sieber, Bert Granoff and the Nonchalants, from the Warner Brothers' Earle, from which also will come that amiable and brilliantly talented star of the stage and cinema, Ricardo Cortez. Mr. Cortez will be accompanied by his partner, Nick Copeland, a comedian of the first rank.

In addition to these eminent stars of the stage and screen, the night clubs and radio also will be well represented on the program.

This department, in so far as it has had anything to do with it, wishes to extend its profound gratitude to these gracious ladies and gentlemen of the theater who have agreed to illumine this occasion by their presence. It is just one more reflection of the generous helpfulness of "show business."

Personal Envy Note.

With Arliss in "Disraeli" Revival

With the revival of "Disraeli," the screen version of the Louis N. Parker stage play in which George Arliss won the annual prize award for the best picture in the season of its original release, there come also revived memories of one of Joan Bennett's first important roles. She appears in the part of the admiring young woman, created on the stage by Violet Heming. "Disraeli" is being shown currently on the screen at the Belasco Theater, where its run was inaugurated with a late preview showing last night.

The Screen Has Advantage in New Show Week

That enduring favorite of the years, "Blossom Time," based on a romantic incident in the life of Franz Schubert and boasting a score composed principally of his own imperishable melodies, as arranged for this stage production by Sigmund Romberg, will be the attraction at the National Theater for the week beginning next Monday night. The cast on this occasion is led by Robert O'Connor, Mary Cecil and Robert Lee Allen. The production is said to be on a par with that of any previous season of the many during which this seemingly immortal work has been on tour. There will be the usual Wednesday and Saturday matinees.

Jeanette MacDonald and Nelson Eddy, the unforgettable co-stars of Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer's filmization of Victor Herbert's "Naughty Marietta," will be seen and heard again together in the principal roles of the same producers' "Rose Marie," on the screen of Loew's Palace Theater, beginning Friday. This is the first operetta ever filmed and recorded in the open in such natural environs as the story actually demands. The brilliant supporting ensemble is headed by such luminaries of the screen as Allan Jones, recently with the Marx Brothers in "A Night at the Opera;" Reginald Owen, Una O'Connor, James Stewart, Herman Bing, Lucien Littlefield and many others.

• • • •

"The Petrified Forest," the Warner Bros'. picturization of the successful stage play by Robert E. Sherwood, with Leslie Howard in the role which he created on the boards, and Bette Davis supporting him, just as she did in the film version of "The Animal Kingdom," will be the major screen attraction at the Earle Theater for the week beginning tomorrow. Genevieve Tobin, Humphrey Bogart, Dick Foran and Charles Grapewin are other important members of the cast. On the stage the vaudeville portion of the entertainment will be headlined by the personal appearance of Bebe Daniels and Ben Lyon, noted stars of both stage and screen. Other acts will include the Radio Ramblers, James Alvan, in "Harmonica Harmonies," and the Grace De Faye Company.

• • • •

Rosalind Russell, remembered for her excellent work opposite William Powell in "Rendezvous," and George Raft will be seen together for the first time on the screen in the pivotal roles of "It Had to Happen," a film play of tense drama and hearty laughs, which will constitute the foremost motion picture attraction at Loew's Fox Theater for the week beginning tomorrow. Leo Carillo, Arline Judge and Alan Dinehart lead the supporting cast. The stage offering for the new week will be provided by Dave Apollon and his "International Revue," in which he still features his orchestra of Filipinos.

• • • •

Ann Harding and Herbert Marshall, two of the most popular stars of the celluloids, will be seen as costars of "The Lady Consents" on the screen at RKO-Keith's for the week beginning tomorrow. In this sophisticated comedy other important roles are played by Margaret Lindsay and Walter Abel. The chief auxiliary of the bill will be the eleventh issue of "The March of Time." This new issue of the modernized newsreel deals with three timely and interesting subjects—"Moscow," the Hartman discovery that made possible that instrument of torture, the dentist's drill, and "Father Divine." The customary short reels will complete the program.

• • • •

"The Bride Comes Home," that hilarious comedy in which the foremost roles are played by Claudette Colbert, Fred MacMurray and Robert Young, will renew its F street popularity as chief feature of the screen bill announced for the Columbia Theater beginning tomorrow. As an extra added attraction will be exhibited for the first time here, "In Little America," a pictorial record of the adventures of Admiral Richard Evelyn Byrd in the Antarctic.

• • • •

"Heidi," a production of the Children's Theater of New York, seems destined to break all previous attendance records when it is presented in the National Theater on Saturday morning. The house already is sold out. Only two more plays remain on this year's schedule of this organization—"The Secret Garden" and "The Beauty and the Beast."

• • • • •

Beginning today and continuing the principal feature of the bill throughout the remainder of the week, the Little Theater will present the Ben Hecht-Charles MacArthur production of "The Scoundrel," in which Noel Coward makes his only screen appearance to date. Julie Hayden, Stanley Ridges, Alexander Woolcott and Hope Williams are important in the cast.

• • • •

James Cagney and Pat O'Brien return to the downtown first-run area for the week beginning tomorrow in a repeat run of "Ceiling Zero," the exciting screen version of Commander Frank Wead's even more exciting stage play. The bill will be completed by the usual array of short-reel subjects and a full 15-minute newsreel. The story of the feature is one that deals sensationally with commercial aviation.

• • • • •

Ann Corio, the supreme beauty of burlesque, returns to the Gayety Theater for the week beginning with the habitual Sunday matinee performance as star of her own troups of "Girls in Blue." She will be supported by a clever company of comedians, singers and dancers—but the main attraction will be Ann. And what an attraction!

U. S. Hockeyists Win, 1-0; Hopes Fade in Other Olympic Tests

Bobsledders And Skaters Shut Out

Sonja Henie Leading on Ice; Swiss Sled Wins With U. S. Fourth.

By the United Press.

GARMISCH-PARTENKIRCHEN, Germany, Feb. 12.—European athletes continued their sweep of titles in the fourth winter Olympic games today, almost shattering American hopes of retaining any of the championships won in 1932.

Shorn yesterday of one title which it captured four years ago at Lake Placid, America dropped two more today as Switzerland triumphed in the four-man bob race and Norway's Ivar Ballangrud sped to victory in the 5,000-meter (5,470 yards) speed-skating event in record-breaking time.

The only bright spot of the day for America was a 1-0 victory its hockey team scored over Austria. The triumph, made possible by Johnny Garrison's goal late in the second period, was Amercia's second straight in the semi-final round and virtually assured it a spot in the finals for which four teams qualify.

Czechoslovakia Wins.

In another game in the same division Czechoslovakia defeated Sweden, 4-1. In the other group, Germany and Great Britain fought to a 1-1 tie which deadlocked them for first place with three points each. Canada swamped Hungary, 15-1.

Each team plays one more semi-final match tomorrow, with America and Czechoslovakia certain to qualify from their group. America meets Sweden and the Czechs tackle Austria.

Britain is favored to advance by stopping Hungary. Canada, which won all Olympic titles since the winter games were inaugurated in 1924, will have to beat Germany to move into the finals. Even a tie will eliminate the Canadians.

A third title was captured by Sweden, which smashed into the victory column for the first time when Erik Larsson, husky, blond iron worker, won the 18-kilometer cross-country ski race.

As had been expected, America's skiers finished far in the rear, with Karl Magnus Satre, of Salisbury, Conn., turning in the best performance by finishing thirty-fifth in a field of 115.

Sonja Henie Leading.

Norway also drew to within striking distance of another championship when Sonja Henie, figure-skating winner in 1928 and 1932, completed her school or compulsory figures with a total point score of 251.6. The event will be completed Sunday with free-style figures.

By placing 3 men among the first 6 in the 18-kilometer ski race and winning the 1,500-meter speed-skating, Norway smsahed into first place in the unofficial team standings with 45 points.

Germany, which failed to score a single point today, dropped to second, with 37. Finland, with 24, moved into third, trailed by Switzerland, Sweden and America.

The Swiss picked up 12 points, bringing their total to 18, by sweeping first and second in the bob races. Amercia added four with fourth and sixth in the bobbing.

Bob-Sledding Not Surprise.

Failure of America to retain the bob title won four years ago was no surprise. Unfamiliar with a course which Europeans know very well, the No. 1 American team, piloted by J. Hubert Stevens, of Lake Placid, finished fourth. The No. 2 team, driven by Francis Tyler, of Lake Placid, was sixth.

Because of its smashing triumph today, Switzerland is favored to win the two-man title which America captured in 1932.

Ballangrud, who finished fifth in 1932, shaved almost 20 seconds from the Olympic record as he sped to victory in the 5,000 event in eight minutes, 19.6 seconds. In addition to the Norwegian, the eight next men also better the 8:3) mark which Clas Thunberg, of Finland, hung up in 1924.

Canadians to Hold 'Protest' Meeting

Members Would Jump Their Reservation.

By the Associated Press.

Garmisch - Partenkirchen, Germany, Feb. 12.—There's another spot of trouble coming up in Olympic hockey circles, and just when officials had become confident that all disputes had been safely buried.

The Canadians, looking into the intricate details of deciding the Olympic hockey winners, have decided to hold themselves an indignation meeting tomorrow and members of the Dominion delegation are talking about jumping the reservation.

The complicated Olympic system of deciding the championship is responsible for the threatened uprising. The Canadians learned tonight that if they enter the final group with England and two other teams, they will start the decisive round-robin one game down.

In other words, they won't have a chance to play England again and England's surprising victory yesterday will apply to the final series. By the same token, if America should enter the final quartet with Czechoslovakia, as appeared probable tonight, she likewise would have a running start of one game and would be required to play only England and Canada.

Helen Mayer En Route to Germany

Jewish Fencer 'Delighted' to Return; She Denies Pressure Was Used.

NEW YORK, Feb. 12.—Fraulein Helen Mayer, blonde queen of the foil and erstwhile Nazi-Jewish storm center on the American Olympic front, tonight broke the silence she has maintained since accepting Germany's invitation to fence for the Reich in the Olympic games. Then she sailed for Germany on the Bremen.

The German-Jewish fencing star insisted that she was "delighted" to be returning to Germany—after nearly four years in the United States—to compete for the Fatherland. And she denied that she consented to represent the swastika because of "pressure."

Tall, athletic Fraulein Mayer—with taffy-colored hair and muscular right wrist—who arrived from California a few days ago, also denied any reluctance in returning to Germany despite the "Offenbach incident" in which she was expelled in 1933 from the Offenbach Fencing Club, in which her dead father had been a charter member.

Just Local Prejudice.

"That was just an outcropping of local prejudice," she explained. "I would be very silly to interpret the attitude of one small community as reflecting sentiment throughout Germany. Besides my mother and two brothers no longer live in Offenbach. They reside now in the mountains near Frankfort-am-Main. That's where I am going."

"I am returning to Germany as a full-fledged citizen," she continued. "And I may remain there after the games. I may go to a German university to get my doctor of philosophy degree there in comparative literature." She is going to her homeland early to be assured of ample training.

This German-Jewish girl who represented Germany at the Los Angeles Olympic games in 1932, said she regretted the furor which accompanied her acceptance of Germany's invitation to compete this year.

Holdout Martin Denies He Is Holdout

'Little Misunderstanding' About Contract Exists, Says Cards' Star.

By the Associated Press.

OKLAHOMA CITY, Feb. 12.—John Leonard "Pepper" Martin has rejected the 1936 contract proffered by the St. Louis National Baseball Club, but he insisted tonight he's no holdout.

Holdout, explained the fleet Cardinal fielder who stops ground balls with his chest, is a nasty word. He put it this way:

"We have had a little misunderstanding about my contract. That is all. I think it will be settled soon."

Martin, who lives here and is vice president of the Oklahoma City Club of the American Hockey Association, did not care to discuss the terms of the rejected contract.

Sent Contracts Back.

He is reported to have sent three contracts back to the Cardinal management.

A reliable source said the latest contained no clauses which would prevent Martin from indulging in another hobby during the baseball season, that of midget automobile racing.

The management last season frowned on Martin's enthusiasm for the sport and the Pepper at that time said he would give it up rather than let it interfere with his baseball career.

"I don't know how that story got out," he said. "I'm ready to play baseball right now. I've kept in condition by hunting."

Maranville Is Signed As Player-Manager

Boston, Feb. 12 (U.P.).—Walter (Rabbit) Maranville, veteran Boston Bees infielder and originator of the so-called "vestpocket catch," has been signed as player-manager of the Elmira Club of the New York-Pennsylvania League, President Bob Quinn announced tonight.

This Morning . . .

Without Shirley Povich.

By Lewis F. Atchison.

FAR be it from this department (which would be Shirley Povich's lead this morning) to level an accusing finger of criticism at a contemporary, a bosom pal at that, but it seems to me that my immediate predecessor in this space must have been short-changed in a restaurant or have been the victim of a similar calamity to sit down and turn out a piece like the one he wrote yesterday panning sports in general.

ATCHISON.

McCormick couldn't have been in his right mind when he pounded out that column. Or, perhaps he was. Maybe he's going straight from now on. But it simply didn't sound like the sage of socko. It didn't ring true to a guy who looks upon every flat-footed bum boasting a pair of tights, boxing gloves and a manager as a big kid, a kid who can do no wrong at that.

It couldn't have been the same guy who saw in Maxie Baer, and later Joe Louis, the greatest human fighting machine of all time. It couldn't have been the same reporter who loudly proclaimed Champion Jimmy Braddock as the indulgent father, the humorous Irishman, who deserved the great break he got. It couldn't have been. Say it ain't so, McCormick.

All baseball players aren't tramps, Bill. Honest. I know a lot of them would look more natural with a hoe in their hands than a bat, but you'd be surprised at the number of swell people in baseball. And another thing, have you ever considered that at some time in his life every kid dreams of being a big league star, of being the super-human to exceed Babe Ruth's home-run record? Did you ever stop to consider the stabilizing influence it is in our national life?

And you say you don't like horse racing. You can't tell me that, when I've been dragged down to Marty Gallagher's stable of a wintry morning to mount one of the foggy bottom battler's steeds and ride a series of races with you around Potomac Park oval. How about the day at Laurel when you cashed that $56 mutuel, and you know the horse you bet and won on should have paid about $6. Don't tell me you can't see horse racing.

You abhor table tennis, too, don't you. Well, you should. If I didn't play the game any better than you do I'd be agin it myself. The same goes for badminton, horseshoe pitching, swimming, fishing. Tell me, do you know what a fish looks like? Aha, see there! It is not the guy who buys the drinks.

Tell me, my fine unfeathered friend, is this overwhelming disdain for athletics the result of your only participation in sports in recent years, or is your liver out of order again? Do you remember the night you refereed the prize fight at the old Riding and Hunt Club? Remember? That was the night the crowd was riding and the fighters were looking for you, the official arbiter. If that's the alum in your stew why don't you confess?

If that's the reason, permit me to congratulate you, old Persimmon Puss, I'd quit, too. But I would not only cultivate an elegant dislike for sports in particular but the world in general.

I know how much you dislike all this stuff. I can picture you now, crying your little eyes out because you have to cover a fight, or a basketball game. Stop it, you're breaking my heart.

Personally, I think you're slightly damp. I think all sports are grand, and I think this is a great racket we're in. So, gnuts to you, McCormick. I am ashamed for you.

Cox, Dusek Set For Groans Tonight

Quite a Rough Party Is Expected on Valentine's Eve Card.

DESPITE the romance and good will that Valentine's eve inspires, the rassle boys will indulge in their favorite occupation tonight at the Turner Arena, as usual. Quite a rough party can be expected, since the feature involves pugnacious Joe Cox and equally pugnacious Joe Dusek.

This, it seems, is the third of a series of struggle tussles between Cox and the Dusek boys. It all started about a month ago when Cox was unwittingly cast to swap grunts with Earnest Ernest Dusek. Well, the boys had quite a time, thus setting the stage for a return match.

It was in that return match that Brother Cox piled himself up a pack of trouble by accidentally whipping Ernie. Now the Dusek boys have a reputation to uphold so, after a family pow-wow, little Joey was sent forth to meet the enemy. If Cox wins tonight, it is understood that another Dusek will be dispatched to the front. And so on ad nauseum.

Gallaudet Courtmen Meet Loyola Tonight

Gallaudet's Basketball Team invades Baltimore tonight for a game with Loyola, in which the Blues hope to avenge a 28-16 defeat suffered last year. Tomorrow the Kendall Green Wrestling Team journeys to College Park for a meet with the University of Maryland grapplers.

Tech Five Trounces Washington-Lee, 30-13

Washington and Lee, of Ballston, Va., offered little opposition to the fast McKinley Tech courtmen, who piled up a score of 30 to 13 yesterday in the Tech gymnasium. Individual honors were captured by Johnny Hahn with 10 points.

With Tech off in a flurry of baskets, the issue was never in doubt. Half-time found the ultimate winners leading, 14 to 9, and it was 23 to 10 with one period to go.

Spears Eyes Cornell Job Is Rumor

By Alan Gould.

Associated Press Sports Editor.

NEW YORK, Feb. 12.—In the search for a successor to Gil Dobie as head football coach, Cornell University has so far received close to 100 applications, including a surprise nomination in behalf of Dr. Clarence W. (Fats) Spears, veteran Wisconsin coach now under the guns of an athletic probe.

Despite a denial at Madison, Wis., that he had applied for the job, it was learned authoritatively he is among the candidates, whether or not he has communicated directly with the authorities at Ithaca.

This development was viewed with special interest because of its implications as to the possible outcome of the current investigation into football affairs at Wisconsin. Spears, head coach of the Badgers since 1932 and a former Dartmouth all-America player, has been at loggerheads with Dr. Walter Meanwell, director of Wisconsin athletics.

Dobie hooked up with Boston College two days after resigning his $11,000 post, under pressure, but Cornell has encountered complications as well as a host of job-seekers in trying to replace "Gloomy Gil" with a more youthful optimist.

No decision has yet been reached and James Lynah, the new athletic director, has adopted a policy of not commenting upon any individual candidacies. It is likely a final list of "preferred applicants" will be drawn up for consideration soon, with a final choice likely early in March. Meanwhile speculation is rife.

Would Raise Morale.

Cornell alumni, as well as undergraduates, strongly support Lynah's intention to engage a head coach equipped to lift the Ithacans' football morale, at low ebb last season after failure to win a single game. For this reason, Spears' record is not calculated to put his candidacy in a favorable light. Like Dobie, Spears has had big years, but his 1935 Wisconsin team lost seven of its eight games.

Ted Cox, the former Tulane head coach, automatically removed himself from the list of Cornell applicants by signing with Oklahoma A. & M. for 1936. Dick Hanley, who retired as Northwestern's head coach a year ago, is understood to have put in a bid.

Among younger coaches, with exceptional records in smaller college ranks, Don Peden, of Ohio University, Charley Caldwell, of Williams, and Dan Jessee, of Trinity (Conn.) have been favorably mentioned.

G. W. to Invade West Va. Courts

George, Washington's basketball forces will entrain for the West tonight, bound for West Virginia and a couple of tough assignments in Davis-Elkins and West Virginia, who will be met Friday and Saturday.

The Colonials, often long, headed by Coach Bill Reinhart, hope to duplicate their previous performance against Davis-Elkins, which they defeated here last week by a comfortable margin, and to avenge a defeat they absorbed at West Virginia's hands last winter.

George Washington lost to the Mountaineers, 43-41, in a hectic battle that saw the District five trailing by a 22-2 score early in the fray.

Players making the trip are Hal Kiesel and Pete Yurwitz, centers; Walter Bukum, Tommy O'Brien and Ben Goldfaden, forwards; Milton Schonfeld, George Freilicher, "Tuffy" Leemans, Tim Stapleton and "Moe" Berg.

Eddie Cool to Fight Texas Boy at Arena

Eddie Cool, high-ranking lightweight, has been signed to box against Howard Scott, of Texas, in the ten-round feature bout at Turner's Arena next Monday night.

Cool, a veteran campaigner, boasts wins over Harry Dublinsky, Frankie Klick, Tony Morgano, Georgie Gibbs, Mickey Serrian and Benny Bass, among others.

Scott, a recent importation from Texas, has just recently become acclimated and rounded into the fighting fettle that enabled him to pound out a one-sided decision over Joe Rivers, one of Washington's better lightweights.

Maryland Four Loses A. A. U. Title Race

Lenox Hill Relay Team Is Victor in Mile Run, Headley Loses.

PHILADELPHIA, Pa., Feb. 12.—The University of Maryland's crack 1,600-meter relay team, which scored handily in Madison Square Garden less than two weeks ago, was beaten by Lenox Hill in Convention Hall here tonight as they vied for junior national laurels.

The Lenox Hill combine, fast to get away, assumed early command of the situation with the Trenton Times A. A. team in second place. It was an uphill fight all the way for the Marylanders, but Coleman Headley, anchor man on the combination, drew his team into second place and was coming fast at the end.

Grady Winner.

Headley was also entered in the 1,000-meter run and finished third behind John Grady, former captain of the Columbia University, who represented the Patterson Call A. A. Ed Lautenschlager, New York Curb Exchange, was second in the meet.

Al Threadgill, foremost of American Olympic prospects from Temple University, established a new standard in the high jump, clearing the bamboo at 6 feet 6⅛ inches. New records were also set in the 16-pound shot put and the running broad jump.

Larry Cohen, Temple, was responsible for the new standard with the 16-pound shot with a heave of 47 feet 2 inches. Bob Schuenemann, University of Pennsylvania, erected the new broad jump criterion, leaping 21 feet 4¾ inches.

Sealyham Declared Best Dog at Show

New York, Feb. 12 (AP).—An undershung, chunky little Sealyham terrier, champion St. Margaret Magnificent, of Clairdale, tonight was adjudged best dog in the sixteenth annual Westminster Kennel Club Show.

Ladysman Is Injured, Out of $100,000 Race

Los Angeles, Feb. 12 (AP).—Ladysman, candidate for the $100,000 Santa Anita Handicap, sustained a torn leg ligament and today was declared out of the big race.

The 6-year-old, which ran second to Azucar in the big handicap last year, injured the leg in a workout.

Maryland U. Victor Over St. John's

Old Line Five Coasts to 40-28 Victory Before 2,500 Crowd.

Willis in Star Role as Visitors Put Up Plucky But Futile Battle.

By Lewis F. Atchison.

PLAYING smart, fast basketball all the way, the University of Maryland last night spanked a spunky St. John's quintet from Annapolis by a score of 40-28 before some 2,500 fans at Ritchie Coliseum.

In contrast with titanic struggle against Washington and Lee the previous night, however, the game was milder than a church picnic, though not quite as orderly.

Master Vic Willis, the little fellow, jumping center for Maryland, was the evening's outstanding performer by way of scoring. He rang the bell for seven field goals and five fouls, 19 points, or almost enough to down the Crabtown cagers single-handedly. Bernie Buscher contributed 11 toward the victory.

Maryland led by a 19-10 count at half-time after a slow beginning that saw the scoring as painful and dull as teeth-pulling. Len DeLisio, a Washington youth, sank two field goals early in the period to give St. John's a 5-2 advantage, but Willis and Wheeler conspired to regain it with field goals for the Terps and thereafter the issue never was in doubt.

Jim Rowe and Johnny Landres led a St. John's counterattack at the start of the second half that pulled the visitors up to within 6 points of their hosts, 19-25, but here the Terps applied the pressure and forged ahead to more comfortable quarters.

Water Witch Seen Winner at Nassau

Nassau, Bahamas, Feb. 12 (AP).—The 49-foot schooner Water Witch, owned by C. A. Hansen, of the Shore Acres Yacht Club, Mamaroneck, N. Y., late today appeared certain winner of the third annual Miami-to-Nassau sailing race.

Still at sea, unreported as dusk fell, were the two smallest, and hence heaviest handicapped, of the ten craft competing, but passing of the hours had used up their time allowances of 10 hours over the scratch boat, the 72-foot staysail ketch Vamarie.

The Vamarie, big mahogany vessel owned by Vadim S. Makaroff, of Oyster Bay, Long Island, which won the 1934 inaugural and finished first last year, sailed the 184 miles of the hard crossing in the record time of 20 hours 19 minutes and 40 seconds.

As in 1935, however, she was edged out on corrected time, the Water Witch's handicap of 5:04.34 proving ample to take care of the 1:51.30 difference between her arrival and that of the Vamarie.

Northeast Temple Girls Beat Wood's Bowlers

The Northeast Temple Girls accumulated a total pinfall of 1,568 to win two games from the Bill Wood's in a Ladies' District League match last night at the Lucky Strike alleys, outrolling their victims by but 7 pins. Catherine Burns featured the win with a 142 game to share individual laurels with Ida Weinberg, her teammate, who chalked up a three-game set of 343. Pauline Ford's 127 game and Irene Scott's 324 was high for the losers.

Western Trounces Bethesda Five, 34-20

Western High recorded its second victory of the year over Bethesda-Chevy Chase yesterday, taking an early lead over the Montgomery County club and coasting in with the reserves carrying the bulk of the attack for a 34-to-20 victory on the Georgetowners court.

The hosts were ahead 19-13 at half time and with Lomax and Burns throwing then up for 10 and 8 points respectively, had little difficulty in running up the 14-point margin of victory. Lozupone was high scorer for the losers with 8 points.

Bean, District Golfer, Defeated in Florida

Miami, Fla., Feb. 12 (AP).—Four steady club wielders racked up 3 and 2 victories over their opponents in the Dixie Amateur Golf Tournament today to go into tomorrow's semifinals.

Winning with this comfortable margin were Celest Durand, Garden City, Long Island, who finished his match with Lea Fowler, Hollywood, Fla., with a medal score of 71, 1 under par, and Medalist Art Lynch, Mamaroneck, N. Y., who advanced over E. H. Bean, Washington.

Send Over Joe Louis, Says Reporter Gallico, Americans Are "Lousy" as Winter Sportsmen

By Paul Gallico.

GARMISCH - PARTENKIRCHEN, Feb. 12.—It is slowly beginning to dawn on your correspondent, though I had to come a long distance to find it out, there exists one branch of athletics at which the Americans are plain lousy, the same being winter sports of all varieties.

This Olympic show is only one week old now and with one exception—the hockey team—the Americans have been universally terrible. It is a great relief to me to find something at which the Americans do not lead the world. As a matter of fact, the Americans walk about the town practically unnoticed, except for the motormen's costumes provided by the American Olympic committee. For heaven's sake send over Joe Louis.

There was much big talk about bob running being our specialty and that we were sure winners at the sport of tearing down the hill. But the sad fact develops that the Americans didn't even take the place money. The team headed by J. Hubert Stevens, of Lake Placid, finished in fourth position, behind the first two Swiss teams and England.

No Mystery Sled.

Our great mystery bobsled about which a teapot tempest was raised, turned out to be just another Flexible Flyer. We placed two sleds in the first events, but so what?

Your correspondent caught a severe cold yesterday after spending five frigid hours on the mountain watching the bob run. He is striking today so he has time to review the situation and think things over. He has reached the conclusion that it would have been better if the Jews had won out and let the boys stay at home. Nothing has been done by our boys to add to American prestige, although Avery Brundage, head of the American committee, looks beautiful in a Tyrolier hat and his badges. Gustavus T. Kirby also is very decorative. Our boys are not much good, but examining the field, I find we have by far the most beautiful officials, with the exception of old Dietrich Wortman, who looks like a local boy.

We were not expected to do much in the ski races, but coasting and speed skating were supposed to be our specialties. Stevens made a good run in 1:18.64 minutes, but along came a Swiss named Capadrutt, who looks like a little high school kid, and does the course in 1:18.61 for a new track record.

Our speed skaters took a trip around the 5,000-meter course today and came within 24 seconds of the time of the winner, Ivor Ballangrud, a Norwegian, who skated the distance in 8:19.6.

Tenth Place Medal.

Robin Lee placed tenth in the school figure skating and received one bronze medal, our total prize loot for the day. They tell me our boys are making a nice collection of beer. Although our lads do not wish to indicate a training breaking scandal. But the sad truth is we are just tenth raters in winter sports.

Maybe something is the matter with our brand of winter back home. Anyway, we can deflate our chests for six months now until we send the Africans to Berlin to reclaim the athletic superiority of America.

Your correspondent discovered that he was taking the winter sports much too seriously. It is true there have been plenty of thrills and danger, but mature consideration forces the conclusion that most winter sports are performed on the athlete's back porch. It is plain our boys are not tough enough in that part of the anatomy. I spend hours watching the ski jumpers and slalom men, the bob-sledders and ice skaters sliding about on their rears. No real winter sports athlete considers competing without a reinforced pants seat.

Rather Cold Work.

Also this sport is performed outdoors in subzero weather. A correspondent must be a combination mountain goat and Eskimo to cover it. After what I have been through in the last six days, never again will I complain about the draughty press coops at home. I haven't been warm since I arrived here. The Germans were not slow to learn the American system that the guest grand stands and the roofed press pens must be open and poorly located to see the events. It is same the world over, the big shots always down in front and the other guys take what is left.

I would appreciate an Abyssinian assignment for just one week to thaw out.

Owens' Enforced Rest Seen Boon To Negro's Chances in Olympics

By the Associated Press.

COLUMBUS, Ohio, Feb. 12.—The ill wind which blew Jesse Owens out of winter Big Ten competition, Coach Larry Snyder of Ohio State paraphrased today, may waft the Buckeye track and field star into a couple of Olympic championships.

The ill wind was Owens' failure to hurdle a psychology test, making him ineligible for intercollegiate meets during the winter term. Ohio will feel the loss of its star and Captain Snyder said, but Ohio's loss will be the American Olympic team's gain.

Owens, who set world records for the 220-yard dash, low hurdles and broad jump, and tied the 100-yard mark in the Big Ten meet last year, is taking it easy these winter days.

That lay-off, Snyder said, will prove a valuable asset when the spring and summer wars start. The "ebony antelope" will begin his workouts late this month, and Snyder said he should reach the "peak" in time for the Big Ten meet, the Olympic tryouts, and the Berlin games.

Last year Owens got an early start and swept through all opposition until he tired late in the season, when he was beaten several times by Eulace Peacock in the 100-yard dash and the broad jump.

"We regret having Owens out of our indoor meets, but looking at it from a national standpoint, his ineligibility is a blessing in disguise," Snyder said. "Jesse is the greatest track star in the country, and his late start is certain to give America several points in the Olympics."

W. & L. Finishes Fast to Turn Back Navy Cagers, 29 to 23

Generals Win 12th Game In Row

Behind 20-10 at Turn, Middies Rally, but Tire Near End.

Special Dispatch to The Post.

ANNAPOLIS, Md., Feb. 12.—Battling nine minutes to a standstill after Navy staged a brilliant rally in a hair-raising second half, Washington and Lee's Southern Conference leaders today rolled up their twelfth straight basketball victory, 29 to 23, on two spectacular side court shots and a foul goal as a stubborn Naval Academy basketball five suffered its fourth loss.

Navy's stalwarts, throwing the hooks into the Generals in a desperate second period rally, pulled within four points of the Virginians, but lacked the final punch to upset the Dixie hoopsters.

After being outscored 20 to 10 at half time, the Tars dominated the play early in the last frame as Fred Shamer, Navy's regular forward, benched with an ankle injury, and Alan McFarland, his running mate, launched a sortie, breaking down the visitors, lead.

After the Middies outscored the Generals, 10 to 4, within six minutes, the Generals' defense stiffened. For nine minutes both belligerents sought to dent the netting without avail, both teams playing to a standstill, the score remaining at 24 to 20 in favor of the Generals.

Then further down the line there is the Clumber spaniel, a whiteish creature with staring red eyes. It looks as if it were a slave to demon rum.

That animal labeled Bedlington terrier might be mistaken by a mutt fancier for last year's muff, and the ears of the Sky terrier in the next cage looks like a couple of envelope flaps gone wrong.

But these are all dogs. The catalogue says so and gives their names, too.

There's only one good old "Rover" in the lot—and his full name is "Penthouse Rover." Just what influence the prune has on social dogdom is a mystery, but the prune figures in a lot of names such as "Prune's Own Lady Margaret," "Prune's Own Charm," and "Prune's Miracle."

The Ethiopian, Mr. Selassie, and the American mouse family are well represented. There are two dogs named "Haile Selassie," two Mickey Mouses" and a "Minny Mouse."

Columbus Ring Team Ready For King

Shub and Morse to Meet Top-Notch Opponents, Line-up Unchanged.

IT may be close to Valentine Day, but there will be no love and kisses wasted tomorrow night when Columbus University's ringmen come to blows with the representatives of King College.

The Navigators were busier than a flea at a dog show yesterday, polishing their weapons for the impending King visit, and Coach Bobby Goldstein was satisfied at its conclusion that his men will be in the proper mood for the reception.

Leon Shub, shifty and hard-hitting Columbus captain, probably has drawn the toughest assignment of the match in Bill Wilkinson, who is Seaboard Golden Gloves champion of the lightweights. Shub will find it necessary to give his best to win from his opponent, according to advance reports.

Goldstein's previous intention of shifting his line-up for the match with a view to giving some of the rookies an opportunity of displaying their wares, has been abandoned. He now intends to stick to the same team that won a decision over Miami two weeks ago.

Another good bout should materialize in the 119-pound class wherein Ray Morse, District Golden Gloves champion, will meet Capt. Lewis Summers, a lad who boasts 21 consecutive knockouts in college competition. All in all, Columbus looms as no better than an even money shot at best—according to advance reports.

10 More Star Players Are Named

Love, Judd and Manners Are Nominated for Trial With Nats.

THE parade of Washington's sandlot baseball stars, which will end at Nationals' training camp at Orlando, Fla., for some lucky, talented youth, brings forth ten more outstanding players of the city today.

If the pitcher, catcher, infielder or outfielder to be sent South by The Washington Post is not in this blue-ribbon brigade, then it will take some eyelash figuring to select a player better qualified.

Representing the pick of the Departmental, Federal, Atlantic and Pacific, Army and Navy and Police Boys Club leagues, the following stars join the 14 players already nominated for the honor which will give one of them a free tryout with the Nats at the expense of The Post.

Departmental League.
(Nominated by President Vic Gauzza.)

Louis (Lefty) Jewett—"the class of Washington sandlot players"—26-year-old pitcher and outfielder; hit .387 for PWA; smart, all-around ace; has pitched for Winchester, Culpeper, Front Royal and Winston-Salem.

Federal League.
(Nominated by President Vic Gauzza.)

Ernie Boggs—Right-handed pitcher for Federal Communications; sturdy 22-year-old briny pitcher; elevated F. C. C. from last place to third place in league.

Charlie Torice—22-year-old catcher and infielder; hit .400 for Procurement Division; also starred for Pepco team in National Capital League.

Atlantic & Pacific League.

Joe Merella—21-year-old left-handed first sacker for Rajah Club, runner-up to Bokar. Former Mount Rainier Gray star; consistent .325 hitter.

Army and Navy League.
(Nominated by Lieut. John Barrett, league president.)

Lefty Manners—26-year-old hard-hitting first baseman and pitcher; hit .330 for Receiving Station Club; had tryout with Baltimore Orioles; refused to leave service for Baltimore Farm team. Hit .400 for All-Star Service team, pitched against and beat Clarendon, of North Virginia League, and the Heurich Brewers, National Capital champs.

Joe Cardwell—27-year-old catcher for Naval Air Station; hit .310; former star for U. S. S. Lexington; led league in runs score; starred in All-Star post-season games, in which the team won all six games played.

Police Boys' Club League.
(Nominated by Pres. Morris Fox.)

Wade Pembroke—Tall, husky 17-year-old pitcher for No. 5 Precinct team, league champs; considered certain star for Eastern High this season.

Jack Carver—Massive, Walter Johnsonian built pitcher for No. 5; another Eastern High "find;" pitched three no-hit, no-run games last year to help give No. 5 the championship.

Twelve of the 16 leagues in The Post Sandlot Baseball Association have had their nominations announced. The choices of the remaining four, Industrial, Government and National City "A" and "B" Leagues, will be published tomorrow.

Meade Pilots Chance Ray to Victory

By the Associated Press.

HIALEAH PARK, Fla., Feb. 12.—Mrs. W. Plunkett Stewart's Chance Ray ran a mile and a furlong in 1:49 flat, or only three-fifths of a second slower than Blessed Event's track record, to win the Abraham Lincoln, a grade "A" handicap that topped a bargain bill of eight races here today. With Jockey Don Meade completing a triple, the 4-year-old gelded son of Chance Play led virtually all the way to register by a length over T. S. and J. S. Mulvihill's Mountainy Man. Mrs. B. N. Kane's Fidelis, favorite in an open betting affair, was beaten by a slightly smaller margin for the place.

Mrs. Payne Whitney's Cheshire, 4-year-old colt by St. Germans, and a close second choice to Fidelis, broke down around the final bend.

Cheshire in Front.

The unfortunate Cheshire was first to break, but he quickly dropped far out of it and Joe Wagner began pulling up the colt at the far turn. Meanwhile, Meade had swung Chance Ray into the lead shortly after the break. He gave his mount a beautiful ride, keeping the gelding a slight margin in advance of Mountiany Man and saving enough with which to open up daylight in the home lane. Fidelis never could better third place.

Bar Nothing, the Blue Larkspur filly that won her last two starts in whirlwind fashion, made it three in a row in the Nancy Hanks purse, a 6 furlong dash that served as the secondary feature of the day. Meeting eight other 3-year-old fillies, the bay miss representing "Mr. French" was coupled with E. R. Bradley's first-time starter, Bold Flirt, and closed favorite at $4.30 for two.

Runs Fast Race.

Bar Nothing jumped into a quick lead and, held under restraint by Don Meade, breezed home by three lengths in 1:11 flat. Naughty was second, another three lengths before Seven Pines. A bad start saw the consistent Bay Bubble away with scant chance. She had been expected to provide the real test for Bar Nothing, but the Stroube filly never could improve over fifth position.

Bar Nothing began her career here last month, twice running out of the money before she developed the form that has made her something of a sensation in the 3-year-old ranks. Trainer William Hurley said of the filly prior to her effort today: "She will go in the Florida Derby providing nothing happens to her. If she stands up all right, she will be made a supplementary entry later on."

Major Miller on Air.

Are boxers of today inferior to those of the past when Jim Jefferies and Jim Corbett were in their prime?

This question will be answered tomorrow night by Maj. Heinie Miller, local boxing commission executive and ring authority over Bill Coyle's sports parade broadcast from Station WMAL. The interview will go on the air at 6:30.

GAME BOY drew into a safe line during the opening furlong, was kept under pressure and held his opposition safe to the end. STORY TIME, raced straight and true along the inside and finished with good courage, to outstay ALEXANDRINE. Latter followed in close attendance of the leaders during the early racing and held on gamely for the closing drive. HI LAD was hard hustled all the way, but could not improve his position.

Two-dollar mutuels paid—COUNT ME, $39.70, $10.50, $5.30; FLAG OF WAR, $3.60, $2.60; BUZZIN' AROUND, $3.00.

COUNT ME, outrun for the first six furlongs, went to the leaders readily when leaving the backstretch, wore the leaders down to take command in the last three sixteenths and drew out nicely nearing the finish. FLAG OF WAR was rated while chasing in pursuit of LETTER BOX, but was unable to stay with the winner after making a strong effort when reaching the homestretch. BUZZIN' AROUND went in the first flight and held on well under a hard drive.

FOURTH RACE—One and one-eighth miles; claiming. Purse, $800. For 4-year-olds and upward. Start good. Won driving; place same. Went to post at 4:11. Off at 4:14. Winner, Brentwood Stable's b. m. LADY COUVIN, rated off the early pace, challenged strongly when shaken up, came around the leaders and closing in determined fashion, was up in the last 50 yards. ALBUQUERQUE sprinted into an easy lead, saved ground all the way, but could not withstand the winner when vigorously urged. OVERSTIMULATE bettered his position on the outside and came with good courage in the final test.

FIFTH RACE—Six furlongs; allowances. Nancy Hanks purse, $1,000. For 3-year-old fillies. Start poor. Won easily; place driving. Went to post at 4:44. Off at 4:48. Winner, Mr. French's b. f. Two-dollar mutuels paid—BAR NOTHING (entry), $4.30, $3.20, $2.50; NAUGHTY, $7.10, $4.00; SEVEN PINES, $7.50.

BAR NOTHING sprinted into an easy lead immediately, rallied quickly after being given a breathing spell midway of the turn and held away for the entire trip. NAUGHTY improved her position on the outside, closed gamely after being put to a hard drive, but could not threaten the winner. SEVEN PINES held a forward position all during the running and was easily best of the others.

SIXTH RACE—One and one-eighth miles. Abraham Lincoln Handicap. Grade A. Purse, $1,500. For 3-year-olds and upward. Start good. Won driving; place same. Went to post at 5:15. Off at 5:16½. CHANCE RAY outran his field to the first turn, was rated nicely while setting the pace, came courageously when shaken up and outstayed MOUNTAINY MAN. Latter followed close to the winner until reaching the homestretch and continued willingly until the close. FIDELIS went well placed and came with excellent courage under a vigorous drive.

Two-dollar mutuels paid—ROUND TABLE, $32.20, $13.20, $9.30; CHANCE KING, $11.50, $7.50; FUSCO, $7.50.

ROUND TABLE, going in vastly improved form, and having much more speed than any of his recent efforts, raced DAN SKILLING into submission in the first six furlongs, met strong efforts from CHANCE KING and was under a hard drive at the end. CHANCE KING, prominent from the start and saving ground early, was wide on the outside in the final drive, but hung badly after drawing on practically even terms with the winner in the closing furlong. FUSCO, crowded back early, obtained racing room on the inside and finished gamely.

EIGHTH RACE—One and one-eighth miles; claiming. Purse, $800. For 4-year-olds and upward. Start good. Won driving; place same. Went to post at 6:15. Off at 6:19. Winner, Miss Judy Johnson's b. g. LATIVICH, showing considerable improvement, raced close to the leaders from the beginning, took command when leaving the backstretch, then holding on gamely under a hard drive, barely lasted to withstand LONE HAND. Latter also showed much improvement, to offer stiff opposition from start, then fought it out stubbornly approaching the finish. DRUSUS went to the outside when bettering his position, but was held safe during the closing stages.

Financial and Business News of the Day

Heavy Industry Main Backlog Of Steel Rise

Firm Scrap Prices Also a Bullish Factor in Situation.

By the Associated Press.

New York, Feb. 12.—Support from the heavy industries has again offset the depressing effects of unseasonably cold weather and declining automobile output, and enabled steel production to rise moderately, Iron Age says in its weekly summary.

Another bullish factor in the current situation is the extremely firm position of scrap prices, notwithstanding the fact that weather conditions have been more responsible for advances in prices than anything else, the review says. The trade publication's composite price of No. 1 heavy melting steel scrap has risen to $13.75 a ton, the highest level since September, 1930.

While railroad business dominates the steel market for the moment, the publication states, pipe line activity is increasing and shipbuilding is rapidly approaching its normal position as a market factor in the Eastern States.

Shipbuilding Orders.

"Some yards are booked to capacity over the remainder of the year," the review says, "and steel is yet to be bought for a large ocean liner to be built at Newport News, Va., which will take 15,000 tons. Four tankers and two cargo-passenger vessels recently placed or actively pending will require an additional 30,000 tons."

The pipe line division is featured by an order for 15,000 tons of 20-inch material placed with a Milwaukee maker, the review states. Standard Oil of Indiana is in the market for a 75-mile line, and 9,000 tons of steel will be required for a water pipe at St. Louis.

In the railroad sector the publication reports considerable new business being placed, including an order from the New York Central for 38,000 tons of rails and one from the Denver & Rio Grande Western for 10,000 tons of rails.

Winchester Firemen Honor City Benefactor

Special Dispatch to The Post.

Winchester, Va., Feb. 12.—Representative Virgil Chapman, of Bourbon County, Ky., and the Rev. Roland Wagner, of Norfolk, were the principal speakers at the annual banquet held in honor of Charles Broadway Rouss, Winchester's benefactor, by members of the fire company which adopted his name. H. B. McCormac, Winchester textile manufacturer, was toastmaster. There were approximately 600 persons present. It was the forty-second program held by the Charles Rouss Fire Company.

Rouss was once a merchant in Winchester. After the War Between the States he went to New York City, established himself as an outstanding merchant and remembered the town where he spent his youth with numerous gifts, including equipment for the fire company.

Leibowitz to Aid 'If Hauptmann Will Tell Truth'

Noted Lawyer Agrees to Try to Save Doomed Man if He Will Talk.

By the United Press.

New York, Feb. 12.—Samuel Leibowitz, the "great mouthpiece" who has saved 112 men from the electric chair, announced tonight that he was going into Trenton State Prison deathhouse to "get the whole truth" from Bruno Richard Hauptmann.

A great criminal lawyer—defender of Al Capone in the lush days of prohibition and chief counsel in the famous Scottsboro cases—Leibowitz said he would join the Hauptmann legal staff if the pale prisoner in cell No. 9 at Trenton "comes clean" about the Lindbergh baby kidnaping.

He said the plan was the result of a visit today from Mrs. Hauptmann. She came to him on this holiday when most downtown offices in New York were closed. For an hour Leibowitz listened to Mrs. Hauptmann, who talked to him rapidly and earnestly in the knowledge that her husband's 30-day reprieve would expire Saturday and that the shadow of the electric chair again was long and dark across his life.

Then Leibowitz came out and said:

"Persons of great prominence and standing have sought to enlist my aid in the Hauptmann case. I have just had an extended conference with Mrs. Hauptmann. I have made it clear to her in plain English under what conditions I will consent to be identified with her husband's case.

"I do not propose to enter this case in order to play a game of legal chess to save Bruno from the chair. Any person with the least bit of discernment can place little credence in the fish stories told in Bruno's behalf from the witness stand in the Flemington courtroom. By the same token there was much produced by the prosecution that smells to high heaven.

Bruno Must Tell Truth.

"The best advocate that Bruno can retain at this crucial moment is Bruno Richard Hauptmann himself. He must make up his mind to tell the truth and all of it.

"I am going to see him in the deathhouse, and he must tell me the whole truth—let the chips fall where they may—or I will not lift a finger in his behalf. The contention that this was a 'one-man job' is sheer nonsense. Perhaps Bruno can supply answers to the perplexing questions in the case. I shall make every endeavor to prevail upon him to do what Gov. Hoffman has asked him to do. Therein lies his only possible salvation from death in the electric chair."

What it all means is that Leibowitz now is a member of the Hauptmann legal staff—he has to be to gain admittance to the deathhouse—but that he reserves the right to withdraw if he can get nothing more from the prisoner than the "fish stories told from the witness stand in Flemington."

Who the persons of "great prominence and standing" were who enlisted the aid of the man often called the greatest criminal lawyer of the age, Leibowitz would not say. There were reports that Gov. Hoffman had suggested to Mrs. Hauptmann that she come here and put the case in Leibowitz's hands. From Washington came a statement from Mrs. Edward B. McLean—already swindled out of $104,000 by Gaston B. Means in connection with the Lindbergh case. It was in answer to rumors that this wealthy woman, who owns the Hope diamond, had agreed to finance Hauptmann's defense, now that all other funds are exhausted.

Mrs. McLean denied she had advanced any money or had obligated herself to do so.

"My only interest in the case," she said, "is the same as that of thousands of other citizens who are not satisfied with the termination of the case. It is badly tangled and confused."

Fisher Sees Failure.

Trenton, N. J. Feb. 12 (AP).—C. Lloyd Fisher, one of Bruno Richard Hauptmann's attorneys, predicted today any effort to get Hauptmann to change his story was doomed to failure.

Fisher visited Hauptmann for an hour in the death house at State Prison shortly after Samuel S. Leibowitz, New York criminal lawyer, conferred with Hauptmann's wife, Anna, in New York, and announced he would enter the case "if Hauptmann would tell the truth."

"Hauptmann has only one story to tell," Fisher said. "That is the story he told on the day of his arrest, at his trial at Flemington, and has told me 50 times since. that is the story I believe to be true."

Barber Sneezes, Breaks 3 Ribs, Customer Safe

Lepanto, Ark., Feb. 12 (U.P.).—C. Baker, a barber, sneezed so hard today that he broke three ribs. A customer he was shaving at the time of the sneeze still is trembling—but Baker had lifted his razor from the man's face before he exploded in the sneeze.

HOUSING problems for the New Deal agencies, some of which are scattered all over Washington, have rather diverted attention from the housing problems of the older established offices. Resettlement Administration's shelter problem, while divided in 23 different buildings, is not as acute as that of the Government Printing Office.

BAKER.

One of the older bureaus, while not under one roof, is housed in several buildings grouped together in a sort of campus plan. It is the Bureau of Standards, which is located in the following buildings:

Sound Chamber.
Low-Temperature Building.
Wind-Tunnel Building (main laboratory, aerodynamics).
Altitude Laboratory.
Dynamometer Building (automotive power plants).
Chemistry Building.
Radio Building.
Hydraulics Building.
Industrial Building (cement, structural materials, optical glass, textiles, paper, rubber, leather).
Kiln Building (optical glass plant, furnaces, etc.).
Fire-Resistance Group.
Ten-Foot Wind Tunnel.

Employes Plan Dinner.

Numerous officials will be honor guests of the District Federation of Federal Employes Unions at a dinner on Monday night at Wesley Hall, 1703 K street northwest. Those expected to attend and address the assembly on subjects of interest to Government employes are:

Representative Robert Ramspeck, chairman of the House Civil Service Committee; Senator W. J. Bulow, chairman of the Senate Civil Service Committee; Senator Pat McCarran, Harry P. Mitchell, president of the Civil Service Commission; Dr Leonard D. White and Mrs. Lucille Foster McMillin, members of the commission; Luther C. Fishery Advisory Committee.

Q. Can you give me information concerning the Fishery Advisory Committee?—J. B. Thurman, Harpers Ferry, W. Va.

A.—This committee was appointed last year by the Secretary of Commerce, representing various branches of the fishing industry, various geographical sections of the country, and related interests including science, medicine and transportation, for the purpose of considering fishery problems from a national standpoint and offering recommendations for promotion and development.

The first meeting of this committee was held last May 6, under the chairmanship of Bernarr MacFadden, and various sub-committees were appointed to give detailed study and later to report on specific fields. Committees were appointed on the protection of migratory fish, on game fish, on the relation of fisheries to other water uses, on scientic research, on food standards, on marketing and distribution, on international trade, and on education and publicity. All these have presented preliminary reports and drafted a program for future activity.

Mrs. Swanson And First Lady To Name Ships

2 New Aircraft Carriers to Be Christened in April and Late Summer.

The Navy's new aircraft carrier, the Yorktown, will be launched at Newport News on April 4. Mrs. Claude Swanson, wife of the Secretary of the Navy, will act as the ship's sponsor.

At the same time it was stated at the Navy Department that Mrs. Franklin D. Roosevelt will sponsor the Enterprise, sister ship of the Yorktown. The Enterprise will not be ready for launching until late in the summer.

The newest of the aircraft carriers which has been designated as CV-7, will be named the Wasp, according to a statement yesterday. She is being built at Fore River, Quincy, Mass.

The Wasp was authorized by the Vinson-Trammell bill approved March 27, 1934. The selection of the name Wasp is in accordance with the Navy's policy of assigning the names of famous fighting ships to new aircraft carriers.

The new Wasp will be the sixth vessel to bear this name. The first Wasp was an eight-gun schooner of the Continental Navy. She captured the tender Glasgow off Block Island April 6, 1776.

The second Wasp was built at the Washington Navy Yard in 1806, and fought in the War of 1812 under the command of Jacob Jones. The fifth Wasp was a motor patrol boat taken over by the Navy in 1917.

The Yorktown, Enterprise and Wasp will be 20,000-ton vessels, as compared with the 15,000-ton Ranger now in service. The complements of airplanes for these ships now are being procured from manufacturers and represent the latest in aeronautical design. They are high speed monoplanes and are equipped with folding wings for storage purposes.

Body of Helms, Missing Army Aviator, Found

By the Associated Press.

San Bernardino, Calif., Feb. 12.—The body of Lieut. John T. Helms, who had been missing since December 30, was found today at the foot of a 30-foot mountain cliff down which he apparently tumbled after his plane crashed in the Sierra Madre Mountains near Lytle Canyon.

R. E. Jones, assistant supervisor of the San Bernardino National Forest, said the body was a mile from the wreckage of the plane, indicating that Helms struggled down the mountainside for aid and fell over the cliff.

The officer's knife lay at his side. Pieces of his leather jacket had been hacked away as if he had tried to signal for help by throwing the leather into a creek that flows down San Sevaine Canyon.

Airport Road Sale Scored

were two groups of Representatives and Senators.

Members of the Virginia delegation, together with several other Senators, are prepared to block any proposal to close Military road without making specific provision for the construction of a substitute road for the convenience of certain residents of Arlington County.

Other members hold with Nichols that the Federal Government should not surrender control of the road except by direct sale in which it receives the compensation. They favor the closing of the roadway as a hazard, but insist that Arlington has no valid claim on the right of way.

"Why, in heaven's name, should Congress feel bound to make provision for the construction of a substitute road just because certain residents of Arlington County have made use of a War Department highway," Nichols inquired.

"The road was built in 1912 by the War Department to furnish an entry to Arlington National Cemetery and Fort Myer. It is true it was dedicated for public use, but that doesn't mean that Arlington County acquired any claim on it.

"If Congress forces the National Airport Corporation to pay Arlington County for the road, it will be entering into legalized bribery. Why, if the airport owners were to offer money to members of Congress to withdraw their objections to the closing of the road, the Department of Justice would be on their trail in a minute."

Nichols said that McSwain had promised that the joint Senate and House sub-committees will hear him and other members of the House sub-committee which conducted exhaustive airport hearings last year before reporting any resolution. He may be invited to the conference today along with representatives of the several Government departments involved.

The Oklahoma member expects to have a draft of a compromise bill to set up an airport site commission before the end of the week. After it is approved by the House conferees, he will submit it to the Senate managers who are headed by Senator Tydings (Democrat), Maryland.

Two solutions to the airport problem were offered voluntarily yesterday, one by a Washington surgeon and the other by a member of Congress.

Dr. Edward A. Gorman, of 2025 I street northwest, wrote McSwain that a subway might be built "at a very small cost" under the portion of the road crossed by airplanes. If water from the Potomac River should seep into the subway, he added, pumps or syphons might be installed.

Culbertson On Bridge

Mr. Culbertson is acting as referee and reporter for a "grudge" bridge game. By general agreement he fines the players for their errors according to degree of stupidity: Class A errors cost them $1; class B, $2.50; class C, $5; class D, $10. This is the third hand in the series.

"YOU'RE both vulnerable now," I pointed out to the players. "Watch your bidding. I'm going to be pretty severe with a rotten vulnerable bid." I was beginning to enjoy my omnipotent job. For years I, in common with most bridge players, had dreamed blissfully of meting out punishment to partners, and while it is true that this punishment usually took the soul-satisfying form of boiling in oil, the less sadistic substitute of money fines was at least partial fulfillment. This was the next hand.

The bidding:

South	West	North	East
Pass	Pass	Pass	1 Sp.
Pass	2 Di.	Pass	2 N.T.
Pass	3 N.T. [final bid]

South opened the eight of clubs, declarer's nine won the trick. The ace and a small diamond then were played, North holding up his king for some riduculous reason. A third round put North on lead and he now underled his spade ace, the only play that could put declarer on lead. A heart finesse was successful, and two more rounds of diamonds were played. South, to avoid a throw-in play, discarded down to two hearts, two clubs and one spade. But a club lead from dummy put him on lead and he had the hopeless choice of setting up declarer's king of spades or leading a heart, which would give dummy two heart tricks. The contract was made with ease.

All the players looked expectantly at me for my dicta.

"Well, gentlemen," I began, figuratively rubbing my hands, "here is where the kitty gets some nourishment! We'll begin with East. Your play of the hand was terrible! Five dollars, please!"

"But I made the contract!" protested East.

"You did," I agreed, "and for a reason that will cost Mr. North $5!"

At this point North let out a howl. "What could I do?" he demanded.

"Let's start with declarer's play. An estimate of necessary tricks would indicate that four diamonds and five other tricks must be won to fulfill the contract. The five could be made up in different ways: Three hearts and one in each black suit; or two spades, two hearts, and one club; or even two clubs, two hearts, and one spade. But East sacrificed all three possibilities by promptly ridding his hand of entries. He should have led the spade king at the second trick and, if the ace held off, attempted to cash another spade. He then should have taken the heart finesse. The diamond suit always could be established and reached with heart entries. There was no hurry about that!

"But East threw the contract away and North promptly threw it back. There was no reason to hold off the second diamond lead. The king should have won and the ace of spades been laid down. After that the third diamond would have locked the dummy on lead. If declarer had a sure club or heart entry the defenders' position would be hopeless. North should have realized this and played for the one chance."
